U. S. Reversal Of War Stand Told; Morgan Still on Stand

Denies That Bankers Used 'Leverage' on Wilson.

Lamont Is Nettled By Interrogation

Note Indicates McAdoo Urged End of Ban on Lending.

By Felix Bruner.

Sharp differences over the cause of a sudden change in the policy of the United States Government in 1915 against floating World War loans in this country developed in the Munitions Committee investigation yesterday.

After the committee had spent hours in an attempt to prove that "leverage" applied by the J. P. Morgan & Co. on the Wilson Administration caused the war President to relent and to withdraw his objection to loans, J. P. Morgan and Thomas W. Lamont, Morgan partner, firmly denied that any such "leverage" existed.

Lamont said that he did not believe any American would have prolonged the war a minute for financial considerations.

"We understood purchasing for the allies was to shorten the war materially," he said. "The British were unprepared and Germany was the aggressor nation and was prepared. We believe our activities in purchasing did shorten the war.

"We felt it would not be right to bring pressure on Great Britain by withdrawing supplies. We were not for Germany. We were for the allies."

Quizzed in Neutrality.

Lamont was asked whether he believed it would be possible for the United States to remain neutral while prospering from wars in other parts of the world.

"I don't think prosperity from wars affects our neutrality," he said. "I think the whole problem of freedom of the seas is more important. Our Government taking the ground that shippers ship at their own risk might much more greatly affect the question of neutrality."

He said that President Wilson had not been prepared to deviate a moment from the policy of freedom of the seas, but pointed out that at present this Administration appears to be willing to do so.

After tedious preliminaries concerning activities by Morgan in supporting the British exchange in the early days of the war, Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri, who was conducting the investigation, finally came to the point when, in August, 1915, the Morgan partnership withdrew its support of the sterling market, resulting in a sharp drop in exchange.

McAdoo Mentioned.

At this point a cablegram signed by Morgan and addressed to his London office was introduced. It told of a conference between H. P. Davison, Morgan partner, and William Gibbs McAdoo, then Secretary of the Treasury, and added that word had been sent to McAdoo "that we regard the exchange situation as very serious from the point of view of our commerce, in order that the Administration may be fully informed and with hopes that they might in some way be helpful, making to definite suggestions."

The evidence showed that this action was immediately followed by a series of official communications culminating in an about-face on Government opposition to publicly floated loans. The new policy was announced in a note signed "W. W." and addressed to the Secretary of State. The note was dated August 26, 1915. The first big Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000 was floated on October 14.

Both Morgan and Lamont appeared angry at the implication that the Morgan company had been responsible for the change in Government policy.

"Bankers don't bring leverage on the Government," Lamont said. "If they did they would be rebuffed."

"Do you mean that they don't do it or that they don't admit doing it?" Clark asked.

"I mean they don't do it," Lamont said emphatically.

"Can it be possible that other people were as aware of the situation as we were and that they took steps independently of us?" Morgan asked. "You are committing the logical fallacy of saying that because something happened 'after-

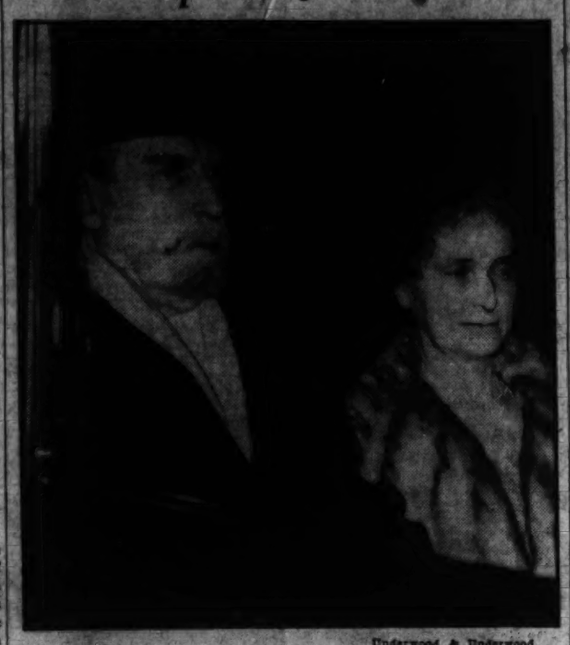
Roosevelts Entertain Judiciary; Three Supreme Justices Absent



Underwood & Underwood.

The Chief Justice and Mrs. Hughes on way to President's reception.

Chief Justice Hughes, However, Is There, Putting Aside AAA Conflict; Two Are Reported Too Ill to Attend.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The conflict between the Executive and the Supreme Court over the moribund AAA was put aside last night as President and Mrs. Roosevelt threw open the doors of the White House for the members of the Judiciary and their wives.

The conflict between the Executive and the Supreme Court over the moribund AAA was put aside last night as President and Mrs. Roosevelt threw open the doors of the White House for the members of the Judiciary and their wives.

It was the second state reception of the season. Those guests who hoped to see all nine of the Supreme Court justices were disappointed, as only six appeared.

Of the three who were absent, two were reported as being ill and the other one rarely attends social functions.

Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes were present, the latter looking very handsome in a gown of rose silver lame fashioned on long lines with a wide shoulder line forming brief sleeves, and a deep Vee decolletage.

Justice Van Devanter Present.

Justice Willis Van Devanter was accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Rariden, who is making her home with her brother since the death of Mrs. Van Devanter. She wore a gown of white satin sprinkled with brilliants, and draped in the front. Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone attended, the latter wearing a gown of black crepe fashioned on simple lines with a brief train. Justice Stone, one of the three justices who upheld the AAA, was seen during the evening deep in conversation with the Attorney General, Mr. Homer S. Cummings, and, whatever the discussion, it was friendly, because both laughed merrily as they parted.

Justice Owen J. Roberts was accompanied by Mrs. Roberts and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts. The former wore a gown of mauve and silver lame made with a long train, and a scarf of ermine, and Miss Roberts was in a frock of white crepe fashioned on Grecian lines and trimmed with a row of tiny rhinsestone bowknots down the front.

Justice George Sutherland was there without Mrs. Sutherland, who was reported ill, and Justice Cardozo, who had planned earlier in the day not to attend the reception, appeared in time to be greeted by many. Justice James C. McReynolds was reported ill with a cold and under doctor's orders to remain at home. Justice and Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis rarely attend social functions and so were absent last evening. Justice and Mrs. Pierce Butler, both ill, did not attend.

Many Others There.

However, other members of the judiciary and their wives and families were on hand to make the reception an interesting one. The reception was somewhat delayed, and it was not until 9:15 o'clock that the President with Mrs. Roosevelt and the members of the Cabinet took up their positions in the receiving line and in the red room to welcome the guests, who assembled in the east room.

Preceded by the corps of military and naval aids and escorted by Capt. Wilson Brown, the President made his appearance, and close behind was Mrs. Roosevelt, escorted by Col. Edwin M. Watson. The First Lady wore a gown of rich plum-colored velvet made with a dropped shoulder line edged with

Taxicab Driver Supports Claim Of Hauptmann

Asserts Isidor Fisch Told of Plans to Scatter 'Hot Money.'

By the United Press.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 9.—Counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann marshaled a file of dead and living men tonight in an attempt to prove they had found evidence of sufficient weight to save the life of the convicted murderer of the Lindbergh baby.

Out of a 2-year-old grave on a Bavarian plain rose the ghost of Isidor Fisch again as an affidavit was made by a taxi driver that Fisch had plotted to swing through half a dozen States, scattering the Lindbergh blood money in exchange for safer currency.

State's Surprise Witness.

Men popped up from scattered places today to add their bits to the evidence and legends of the Lindbergh crime. Hauptmann's lawyers, racing against the swift swing of the days that are bringing them nearer to 8 p. m. of January 17, plan to place all these stories before the New Jersey Court of Pardons Saturday and argue that Hauptmann is not "guilty beyond all reasonable doubt."

The State fought back with a surprise witness of its own, who said he had seen Mrs. Anna Hauptmann riding down a New Jersey road some time before the kidnaping. It was the first time anybody had attempted to link Hauptmann's wife with the crime committed on Sourland Mountain three years ago last March.

David Moore, a farmer, walked into the office of Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, of Hunterdon County, today and said he had something on his conscience.

Taxi Driver's Story.

"He told me," Hauck said, "that he saw a woman whom he identified as Mrs. Hauptmann in a car near the Lindbergh estate a short time before the kidnaping. He said a man who resembled Hauptmann was with her. Moore later went to Flemington and saw the woman on the street during the trial. He told me he did not want to get mixed up in the case at that time.

"However, Moore told me today that when all the publicity came out about the possibility of Hauptmann's innocence he wanted to get this off his chest. He seemed to be a very decent sort of fellow."

Hauptmann's lawyers brushed aside Moore's story in the excitement of what they called "the most vital link in the chain of new evidence."

It was supplied by Oscar J.

British Warn Japan in Rift At Naval Talk

Eden Says Demands May Force New Policy in Far East.

Conference Deadlocked on Parity; Nearing Final Collapse.

By the United Press.

London, Jan. 9.—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, in a last-minute effort to save the rapidly dying five-power naval conference from disaster, warned Japanese delegates that Japan's continued intransigeance may influence British policy in the Far East, it was reported tonight.

The prospect increased that the five-power conference may continue as a four-power conference, without Japan.

Parley Deadlocked.

London, Jan. 9 (AP).—Deadlocked completely by Japan's insistence on naval equality with Great Britain and the United States, the international naval conference played for time tonight to determine whether a collapse could be averted.

The session scheduled for tomorrow was postponed until Monday to give the Japanese delegates an opportunity to consult their government while the other delegates confer among themselves.

Observers generally felt there was little hope of saving the conference unless Tokyo altered its demands or showed a willingness to turn to other topics and forms of naval limitation.

The Japanese, in a private session with the British, led by Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, insisted that fleet equality, based on their plan for a common upper limit of tonnage, be discussed first.

Eden and Viscount Monsell, first lord of the British Admiralty, talked long and inconclusively with the Japanese delegates, Admiral Osami Nagano and Matsuzo Nagai, over their tea. It was believed Viscount Monsell flatly declared it was futile to reconsider the Japanese proposal because no nation except Japan would accept it.

Davis Reported Favorable.

Before the Japanese arrived for the conference, Norman H. Davis, United States Ambassador-at-Large, talked with Eden, and an authoritative source said Davis agreed with the British view that the time had come to "force a showdown" from the Japanese.

The Japanese were obviously nervous when they left the foreign office. All their experts and advisers were summoned to a secret parley immediately after their return to their hotel.

Speculation immediately arose that Admiral Nagano might be asking Tokyo for instructions on whether to walk out of the conference if equality is flatly refused to Japan.

In some quarters the belief was expressed that Monday's session might also be postponed, or perhaps never held.

The British, however, insisted that the delegates meet again, although the exact hour was not fixed.

Cuba Under Guard For Election Today

By the Associated Press.

Havana, Jan. 9. — Two thousand soldiers, scattered throughout Cuba, were ready tonight to preserve order in the election tomorrow of the republic's first constitutional president in 2½ years.

Miguel Mariano Gomez, twice Mayor of Havana, was expected by informed observers to defeat Gen. Mario G. Menocal, twice President of Cuba. A third candidate, Carlos Manuel de Cespedes, former provisional president, made no campaign and it was thought he would not poll many votes.

Since former President Gerardo Machado fled from the island in August, 1933, Cuba has had only provisional presidents.

Expansion of Currency Asked in Confusion on Farm Aid.

2-Hour Discussion Held at White House

Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Are Studied.

Indecision by the Administration on the course of its farm program, now near a standstill as a result of Supreme Court AAA invalidation, yesterday added fuel to demands from Congressional inflationists for currency expansion to bolster prices.

Out of the maze of suggestions for meeting the present dilemma, inflation stuck out its familiar thumb at the Capitol, while Administration officials studied a Federally financed soil improvement program combined with a direct domestic allotment subsidy.

No decision had been reached, however, when a two-hour White House conference adjourned late yesterday. Officials planned to carry their problem to a conference of more than 100 agricultural leaders, summoned by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to meet here this morning.

Peek Assails AAA.

To this conference of farm leaders, George N. Peek, former AAA administrator and Presidential adviser on foreign trade, addressed an open letter, assailing old AAA methods of "restricting and regimenting production."

"This particular method now has been declared unconstitutional," Peek said, "and I, for one, do not mourn. There are other and better methods still available to us, notably those of recovering our home and foreign markets for agricultural products."

Peek proposed first that Congress appropriate funds covering contracts with farmers, signed and executed in good faith under the AAA. He asked stoppage of importations of competitive agricultural products, so farmers may have full benefit of domestic markets. At the same time he demanded abandonment of general tariff reductions under reciprocal trade agreements.

Bankhead Asks Action.

The inflation threat reared again in the Senate, as Senator John H. Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, coauthor of the Bankhead cotton-control law, scheduled for the scrapheap by the Supreme Court, asked the President to make use of inflationary powers under the original AAA act.

"If this Administration is deprived of aiding farmers to get fair prices through methods heretofore so successfully employed, it has another way to accomplish the same result," Bankhead told the Senate.

"If it becomes necessary, the President can protect farm prices by increasing the currency. He has the power, and I think he should exercise it, to issue currency against all the silver owned by the Government and against the gold now lying sterile in the Treasury. * * * Expansion of the currency within stated limits will doubtless protect farm prices."

The Bankhead statement was applauded off the floor by Senator Elmer Thomas, Oklahoma inflationist leader, who earlier in the day called at the White House in support of his currency expansion method of financing the bonus. He insisted currency inflation through the bonus would lift prices generally.

This same sentiment, which has flourished in proportion to Administration uncertainty on farm plans,

$200,000 Bid Wins Convention

Democrats Select Philadelphia As National Convention Scene

City Offers $200,000; Chicago, Backed by Farley, and San Francisco Make Futile Bids; Chairman Says Campaign Will Be Bitter and Dirty.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Unusual and spirited bidding in a gigantic poker game before the Democratic national committee yesterday resulted in Philadelphia being chosen as the meeting place for the Democratic national convention, June 23, two weeks after the Republicans meet at Cleveland.

Philadelphia won the convention by unexpectedly bidding $200,000, thus upsetting the plans of Postmaster General James A. Farley, who had leaned toward Chicago. But the Illinois metropolis declined to raise its bid, despite coaxing from Mr. Farley, chairman of the Democratic national committee.

San Francisco also bid $200,000 through Senator William Gibbs McAdoo (Democrat), of California, and agreed to match a free convention hall and $1,500 of prizes in a letter-writing contest, offered by Philadelphia.

Pick Hostile Territory.

In selecting Philadelphia for their convention the Democrats decided to meet in the section of the country where they are believed to be weakest. Moreover, they will meet in traditionally Republican territory. Thus the Democrats, if the selection of convention cities can be taken as a criterion, declined the Republican challenge to make the Middle West the battleground of the campaign, pitching their tents, instead, in the conservative East.

These aspects of the selection were alluded to in the pleas made to the national committe by half a dozen Pennsylvanians of both parties. It also was contended that Pennsylvania deserved the convention as a reward for its recent turn toward the Democratic Party. Gov. George H. Earle indicated that should the convention be held at Philadelphia there were prospects of President Roosevelt carrying Pennsylvania this year.

Oratorical Possibilities.

The Pennsylvanians clinched the convention for Philadelphia, however, by pleading the appropriateness of the Democrats this year meeting "under the shadow of the Liberty Bell," within walking distance of the hall where Thomas Jefferson's Declaration of Independence was signed and where Benjamin Franklin was buried.

The oratorical possibilities that could be made of such fulsome phrases seemed to overwhelm the committee. When the roll call was less than half completed, the vote for Philadelphia had become such a landslide that Patrick Nash, national committeeman from Illinois, and Senator McAdoo joined in a motion to make the selection of Philadelphia unanimous.

The tussle over the selection of a

Plans to Pay Veterans by Gold and Relief Funds Beaten.

Opponents Stress Threat to Treasury

By Robert C. Albright.

Swinging into an unexpected evening session, designed to freeze out unwanted amendments to the Vinson-Patman-McCormack bonus bill, the House last night rushed the united veterans' cash payment measure to the point of a vote, then adjourned until noon today.

All amendments were speedily crushed by an overwhelming Democratic majority. All that remained when adjournment was ordered at 6:30 p. m. was a ballot today on a Republican move to send the bill back to committee, and a final vote on the bill.

The Republican move to recommit the measure was led by Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee. He demanded that the $2,000,000,000 "debt" to the veterans be paid out of unexpended relief balances. Democrats planned to ride roughshod over that motion when the House convenes today.

Beaten As Amendment.

Treadway offered this identical plan as an amendment to the bill, but it was defeated first by a 116-to-48 standing vote, and later by a 118-to-43 teller count.

All other amendments went the same route, by voice House ballot. Defeated amendments included a proposal by Representative Hamilton Fish, jr. (Republican), of New York, to pay the bonus out of the $2,000,000,000 gold stabilization fund, and a motion by Representative William M. Whittington (Democrat), Mississippi, to employ relief funds for the same purpose.

An amendment by Representative Vito Marcantonio (Republican), New York, to guard against veterans receiving the bonus being removed from relief rolls, was ruled out on a point of order by Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, who wielded the gavel.

Blanton, in his role as chairman, refused to recognize Representative Henry Ellenbogen (Democrat), Pennsylvania, for an amendment exempting estates of deceased veterans from State and Federal inheritance taxes.

Passage Assured.

Passage of the bill by the House today was taken for granted, and sponsors of the measure freely predicted that it will become law this session, even over a Presidential veto.

Nevertheless, stalwart opposition to the Vinson-Patman-McCormack plan was asserted by a handful of Democrats and prominent Republicans.

Leading the Democratic fight on the measure was Representative Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

"We lack $30,000,000,000 of having a cent in the Treasury now," Sumners told the House. "I am willing to become a political casualty if anything I can say will make the Nation realize that if we keep on increasing our deficit a crash is coming."

Wadsworth Leads Foes.

Representative James W. Wadsworth (Republican), New York, former Senator, led an emphatic opposition stand from the minority side of the aisle.

"I still believe it is unsound, both for the country and the veterans themselves," Wadsworth said.

"The President in his budget message has left unguessed his estimates for relief. Since that message was received, an additional burden had been placed on the Treasury by invalidation of AAA. The situation is serious—at least serious to those of us who believe that if we are to escape ultimate credit or currency inflation, we must balance our budget. Any move that brings the budget further out of balance increases the danger of financial collapse.

"This is not a partisan question at all. Now comes this bonus bill, and its advocates say it will cost $1,000,000,000 at the outset. I am

Plains Swept By Blizzards Yield 4 Bodies

Husband Found Stripped of Clothing in Effort to Shield Wife.

By the Associated Press.

Gillette, Wyo., Jan. 9.—Blizzard-swept Wyoming plains today yielded the bodies of four persons, trapped in a raging, sub-zero storm Sunday night.

Searching parties who floundered through heavy ice and snow in a district 25 miles south of here late today found the frozen bodies of Miss Barbara Wagstaff, 38, and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Royal.

The body of Tom Wagstaff, 40, rancher and former British newspaperman, was found earlier. He, his sister and the Royals, members of the same party, were trapped in the sudden storm Sunday as they drove toward their ranch homes after a visit in Gillette.

The bodies of the Wagstaff party were found about two miles from the point where the storm stalled their automobiles. Apparently they had fought against a strong wind, blowing in a temperature of 12 degrees or more below zero.

Searchers said Royal had stripped off all his clothing except a shirt and wrapped the garments about his wife in an attempt to shelter her from the storm.

A faint, wind-swept trail indicated Wagstaff had wandered for several hours seeking a haven from the storm and shelter for his sister and the Royals. Apparently the three other persons set out when he failed to return.

Tonight in Montana's Absarokee Forest, near Livingston, forest rangers prodded cautiously into mountainous snow drifts, hunting the body of Ranger John Norby, believed buried by an avalanche of ice and snow.

At Idaho Falls, Idaho, 20 miners

Alexandria Youth, 3 Pals Die For Murder of N. Y. Policeman

By the United Press.

Ossining, N. Y., Jan. 9.—Four youths, the oldest 21, died in the electric chair at Sing Sing Prison tonight for the murder of a policeman shot in a holdup. It was the largest mass execution at the prison in 15 years.

The youths electrocuted were Raymond K. Orley, 21, who took responsibility for the murder and said his companions should not have to die; Newman Raymond, 21, son of Newman Raymond, sr., lay minister and architect, of Alexandria, Va.; Thomas Gilbride, 20, and Amergo Angelini, 21, both of Corona, Long Island.

The four died for the murder of Patrolman James M. Killian on January 16, 1935, during the holdup of a luggage store in New York City. The policeman was shot as he rushed into the store answering the alarm.

Raymond went to the chair first, entering the chamber at 11 p. m., and being pronounced dead three minutes later. Angelini was second, entering the chamber at 11.05. He was pronounced dead at 11.08. Gilbride, alias Rooney, was the third to die. The current was turned on at 11.10, and he was dead three minutes later. Orley went last, being dead at 11.18, after three minutes in the chair.

The executions were completed

John Gilbert Is Dead at 38; Forgotten by Four Ex-Wives

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood, Jan. 9.—The spectacular and tragic career of John ("Handsome Jack") Gilbert, romantic idol of the movies, ended suddenly today in death from a heart attack.

The last half of his 38 years he spent in Hollywood. Here he knew the ultimate of success and failure, in both his personal and professional life. He was married four times, beloved by many women, and by turns admired and sought after—then alone and forgotten.

Despite his four marriages and his friendship with many women—the latest with glamorous Marlene Dietrich—W. H. Mooring, British studio representative, said Gilbert recently declared his love for Greta Garbo was "the most real thing in my life."

At the same time, Mooring related, Gilbert said he "realized he never would be able to make a comeback in Hollywood."

When death came today, his only companions were his doctor, a nurse and two firemen. They stood beside him in the bedroom of his mammoth, silent home that stands in the hills between Hollywood and the ocean.

The last words he spoke were to his nurse, May Jordan, "Gee, but I'm awfully sleepy."

Miss Jordan, who had been attending him for a week, said he was restless through the night, rose once for a drink of water, and began an incoherent mumbling of speech at dawn. Then, she said, suddenly he grew peaceful, smiled at her and told her he was sleepy.

She said she noticed his labored, stertorous breathing at about 7 o'clock, and called his physician, Dr. Leo Madsen, describing his appearance.

The physician sent an emergency call to the West Los Angeles fire station, and Acting Capt. Alex Peterson, with one assistant, hurried to Gilbert's home with an inhalator.

Gilbert was unconscious in bed, Peterson said.

"We used the inhalator about an hour, trying to make him breathe,

Thyrring Girl, Lost 2 Months, Is Reported Found in Georgia

A girl believed to be 15-year-old Alva Carmen Thyrring, of 417 Oglethorpe street, who disappeared mysteriously from her home October 26, has been found near Oliver, Ga., police here learned yesterday.

Police received a letter from a farmer, C. B. Pryor, of near Oliver, who informed them Miss Thyrring was safe in his home. They immediately communicated with the girl's grief-stricken parents, Mr. and Mrs. Viggio Thyrring, who were delighted at the news.

According to Pryor's story, he ran into the girl in a farmers' market in Savannah, Ga.

"Take me to Augusta," he reported she said to him. "In Augusta maybe I can find work.

"I'm on my way to Florida, where it's warm. It'll soon be cold around here."

Pryor said the girl told him her name was Mary Antionette Kent, that she was 18, and lived in Silver Spring, Md. Both her parents were killed in an automobile accident, she told Pryor, and she left home. She told Pryor her father and mother were Carl and Virginia Kent, but a check-up revealed no persons by this name have been involved in an automobile accident either here or in nearby Maryland.

The disappearance of the Roosevelt High School student caused much investigation on the part of police. Mrs. Thyrring became extremely ill, and Thyrring himself, only last week, posted a $200 reward for her return.

Hastings' Jibes Draw Barrage From Robinson

Delaware Senator Mimics President in Attack on Night Speech.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Hastings (Republican), of Delaware, and Senator Robinson, the Democratic leader, clashed in the Senate yesterday over President Roosevelt's annual message to Congress. Hastings, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, asserted the message delivered last Friday night showed how the President could "hate when he wanted to hate."

Robinson, manifestly angry, retorted that he could not call Hastings "arrogant because the rules of the Senate don't permit it."

"He stands for everything the President opposes," the Arkansas Senator shouted. "He stands against most everything his colleagues on the Republican side of the chamber favor."

Robinson Cites Recovery.

Waving his arms, Robinson said Hastings ignored the fact "that under the Roosevelt Administration conditions that appalled the Nation have materially improved. The record shows the business of the country is approaching a peak."

Hastings said the President in his remarks on foreign affairs, "undertook to make plain without mentioning them, the countries he intended to abuse."

"These words," he said, "instead of promoting peace, may very well be taken by those countries as a deliberate effort to create a controversy."

Then, switching to domestic affairs, Hastings spoke in the first person as though he were the Executive and delivering the message:

"I am sorry to report that I have not been able to keep the promises made about the reduction of Government expenses and you, of, course, know without my telling you, that I was not able to keep the deficit within the five billion I mentioned March 10, 1933, even though the Congress was good enough to grant me the power requested.

"Waste and Extravagance."

"I must say to you frankly that we know not wither we are going. Waste and extravagance in the conduct of your Government has led us into a morass of financial trouble from which we can extricate ourselves only by the utmost display of determination and courage."

Placing the national debt at "30½ billion dollars" the Senator said:

"Yet with all this skyrocketing of expenditures, as we spend $2 for each $1 we take in, as our deficit and our debt enlarges, and as we go merrily along, borrowing more and more, I am happy to tell you that we are approaching a balancing of the budget and that there is no danger of new taxes for the moment."

Belittles Job Program.

Touching unemployment, Hastings said:

"I have only been able to find jobs for 30 per cent of those who are unemployed. It is not quite fair to say we planned it that way, although I do not like to admit that any of my plans have failed.

"We have thus succeeded in increasing the number of persons receiving monthly checks until they equal about 25 per cent of all the votes cast in the last general election and the Government dispenses to these persons the huge sum of $5,387,555,364 annually."

He placed the number on the pay roll as 9,047,956.

The Senator added:

"One of the things that has bothered me the most is the Federal Constitution." He criticized the idea of having Federal subcapitals as "along the line which leads to the heart of socialism."

A. V. Dye Is Named As Commerce Aid

By the Associated Press.

Alexander Vincent Dye, of New York, was nominated by President Roosevelt yesterday to be director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

A list of nominations sent to the Senate also included John Van A. MacMurray, Maryland, to be Ambassador to Turkey.

Arthur Bliss Lane, of New York, was named to succeed MacMurray as minister to Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

Boaz Long, of New Mexico, was nominated to succeed Lane as minister to Nicaragua.

Boy Scout Jamboree Here in '37 Proposed

By the Associated Press.

A bill providing for an international Boy Scout jamboree in Washington in 1937 was introduced yesterday by Representative Dickstein (Democrat), New York.

A jamboree schedule for last summer was cancelled at the last minute, with foreign Scouts already on the way, because of infantile paralysis in the area surrounding Washington. Dickstein said he understood President Roosevelt and the Boy Scouts had agreed on 1907.

On the Hustings

Roosevelt, No Longer the Smiling Squire, Shows Signs of Suffering a Martyr Complex.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT in his two speeches during the last week has presented himself to the country in a new role. Instead of the care-free, smiling squire of Hyde Park, unmindful of his difficulties and enemies, the world his oyster, the President has given unmistakable signs of suffering from a martyr complex. He has struck a querulous, a petulant note.

Thus in his "message on the state of the Union" to Congress one week ago he quoted the words of his teacher of philosophy, Josiah Royce, in a lament over an earnest and righteous life being thwarted . . . "I studied, I loved, I labored, unsparingly and hopefully to be worthy of my generation," asserted Mr. Roosevelt in a voice tinged with emotion.

But more noticeable was his feeling of martyrdom in his thinly veiled parallel of himself and his Administration with that of Andrew Jackson in his Wednesday night address. "Jackson," said the President, and he left no doubt that he also meant himself, "was compelled to fight every inch of the way for the ideals and policies of the democratic Republic in which he believed . . . the great media for the dissemination of public opinion fought him . . . haughty and sterile intellectualism opposed him . . . musty reaction disapproved him . . . hollow and outworn traditionalism shook a trembling finger at him."

And finally, with a note of weariness in his voice, the President declared that "it seemed that sometimes all were against him—all but the people of the United States." And a little further on he said Jackson was "compelled to combat epithets, generalities, misrepresentation and the suppression of facts" and still further on again came that note of weariness, of the harassed man, with the words: "Sometimes at the close of a day I say to myself that the last national election must have been held a dozen years ago—so much water has run under the bridge, so many great events in our history have occurred since then."

Such was the mood into which former President Herbert Hoover fell when the tide of events and of popular esteem turned against him, until soon he was writing friends about the "hair shirts" that he was forced to wear.

James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic national committee, in his address to that group yesterday, touched a few more strokes of the brush to this portrait of the President beset on all sides by unfair, unscrupulous and evil men. The forthcoming campaign, said he, will be one of "defamation on the side of our adversaries, a simple effort to break down the faith of the people" in Mr. Roosevelt—"the bitterest and certainly the dirtiest political struggle" of a generation, consisting of "outright lies and every form of foul whispering you can imagine" financed with "the largest slush fund on record" contributed by men with "neither public conscience nor private scruple."

It is the old political trick of impugning the motives and decency of the opposition before it has opened its mouth. Four years ago the Republicans were accusing the Democrats of seeking to "smear Hoover" and Charles Michelson, whom we suspect wrote Mr. Farley's speech to the committee, was painted as the devil of that conspiracy.

Neither President Roosevelt nor Mr. Farley is a political novice. Both have hit hard in their time and they must realize that if they are to stay in public life they must take some punches. This wailing over the shots and barbs directed at them is just bunkum designed to deceive the public.

How hollow it all is becomes apparent when it becomes specific ". . . And what is the President's reward for having brought about this state of national solvency?" asked Mr. Farley and he went on to reply: "Why, they call him an inflationist and speak of his taking us off the gold standard as if that were something evil, revolutionary, inexcusable."

Mr. Farley knows just as well as any other person familiar with the record that Mr. Roosevelt is not called an "inflationist" because he took the country off the gold standard. Even J. P. Morgan, now being served up on the scarificial altar of neutrality, approved that action.

President Roosevelt has been termed an "inflationist" because he permitted a small group of inflationists in the Senate to persuade him to encourage Congress to clothe him with power to issue $3,000,000,000 of printing press currency, in addition to another $3,000,000,000 currency expansion. He is called an inflationist because he succumbed to the Warren theory that price levels were dependent on the gold content of the dollar and that the way to raise prices was to debase the American dollar, which he did. He is called an "inflationist" because he encouraged Congress to pass, and he approved, a silver purchase act whereby the Treasury has acquired some 600,000,000 ounces of silver, which today is worth substantially less than the sum paid for it without achieving any of the objectives of the legislation.

Before Mr. Farley accuses his adversaries of misrepresentation, of seeking to distort the issues, he should at least keep the record straight.

$202,000,000 In Baby Bonds Go in 10 Months

Morgenthau Proud of Sale of Paper; Maturity Value to Be 270 Millions.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., yesterday pointed with pride to a Treasury accomplishment—the sale of almost one million "baby" bonds in the ten months since they were placed on the market, for a total of $202,500,000.

Fingering a red carnation in the lapel of his gray suit, the Secretary paused only to brush aside rumors from London of further devaluation of the dollar in order to offset the discarded AAA, before continuing to glow quietly over the continued success of the baby bond idea.

The baby bonds, more officially known as United States savings bonds, have been sold on a discount basis, increasing in ten years through accumulated interest to a total one-third greater than the purchase price. Because of this increase, the maturity value of the issue sold so far will be approximately $270,000,000.

The response to this venture, first of its kind since the World War, has continued with such strength that on Monday the all-time high was reached with the receipt by the treasurer of the United States from the postoffices throughout the country of $2,805,459.83 for bonds, with a maturity value of $3,737,946.44. On the same day the treasurer received in cash direct-mail orders, $332,925, for bonds with a maturity value of $443,900.

This compared favorably with the first day's returns last year after a barrage of publicity, when in a day featured by the purchase of the first bond by President Roosevelt, the sale was estimated at between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000.

The bonds range from a minimum face value of $25 to a purchaser limit of $10,000 of such bonds in one year. Bonds selling this year are called Series B, to distinguish them from 1935, or Series A bonds.

The tabulation of sales by States for the first eight months to November 1 showed Illinois, New York and Ohio leading, with cash values of $14,687,868.75, $11,454,158.75 and $10,919,456.25, respectively.

Austria Will Seek Consent for King

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 9.—Diplomatic sources reported tonight that Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria will seek the consent of the Little Entente to restoration of the Hapsburg throne to Austria, with Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, the present vice chancellor, as regent.

The Austrian chancellor, these sources anticipated, will offer to swing his country's political policies away from Italy and Hungary when he meets Czechoslovakian officials in forthcoming conversations at Praha.

However, informed observers believed there was little chance the Little Entente—Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania—will abandon its traditional hostility to the former rulers of the dual monarchy.

Hopkins Warns States to Help Unemployables

Roosevelt Tells Congress 2,756,000 Now Have WPA-Made Jobs.

By the Associated Press.

Harry L. Hopkins issued a warning and a pledge yesterday after President Roosevelt informed Congress 3,541,000 were employed on work relief jobs December 28.

The warning was a reiteration of his demand that States and communities care for unemployables. The pledge was that "the relief problem will be met better this winter than ever before."

Mr. Roosevelt's formal report of activities under the $4,000,000,000 relief fund said 2,756,000 jobs were furnished by Hopkins' Works Progress Administration.

At a press conference later, the WPA administrator said WPA jobs now have risen to 2,755,639. The work relief program, he said, is costing $85 a month per job, compared with the $26 monthly average for direct relief. But Hopkins declared "People on relief are getting better care than a year ago—better not only in terms of money, but on all fronts."

Bonus Effect on Relief.

Reporting that in Cleveland 3,000 out of 40,000 able-bodied needy had obtained private employment since the start of the work relief program, Hopkins declined to estimate how many would still need Federal assistance after July 1.

Cash payment of the bonus, he said, "obviously" would lighten relief rolls. Eligibility of veterans for work relief jobs would "immediately" be questioned, he added.

He indicated that stoppage of AAA benefits by the Supreme Court decision would have some effect on the relief roll, and said he "doubted very much" whether work relief funds could be used for such payments without Congressional approval.

An amendment to the work relief act sponsored by Senator George (Democrat), Georgia, authorized the President to make farm allotments from the $4,000,000,000 fund. Today's report to Congress listed $1,412,727,981 as unspent and unobligated.

Huge Outlays Revealed.

The report also disclosed:

1. Exclusive of $283,561,757 for administrative expenses in Washington and so-called "National" projects, total sums to be spent in States ranged from $460,187,957 in New York and $302,857,703 in Pennsylvania to $8,192,986 in Delaware.

2. Up to December 31, $4,244,804,049 had been allotted, of which $1,672,394,306 actually had been paid out, while $55,195,951 remained available for allocation.

3. Transfer of $300,000,000 in balances from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation increased the amount appropriated to $4,300,000,000.

4. Work relief employment did not pass the 3,500,000 goal until December 21, with 3,521,000 at work, although its "substantial" attainment was announced November 29 together with liquidation of the Relief Administration.

Although insisting every State was "able" to provide for its unemployables, as well as any able-bodied needy not absorbed by WPA, Hopkins declined to say definitely that funds for additional direct relief would not be included in the President's request expected two months hence for additional work relief funds.

He said additional appropriations would be calculated on the basis of "need." At the same time, he called a "terrible thing" the old FERA practice of supplementing wages from private jobs.

6 Dynamite Cases Stolen.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 9 (AP).—Glen Schmidt, State investigation bureau chief, issued a warning today to the thieves who last night stole six boxes from a WPA project. "I hope they know," he said, "those cases are full of dynamite."

Chains Here Cut Flour and Sugar

Flour and sugar price reductions, effective to the end of the week, were announced yesterday by eight out of ten leading grocery chains here.

While not certain how long the reductions would last, store officials interpreted them as an effort to pass along AAA processing tax savings to the consumer as soon as possible, in line with reductions made previously in wholesale prices.

They pointed out, however, that large stocks of both commodities still remained on hand and that the stores, having already shared the burden of the processing taxes, faced the alternatives of taking a loss on these stocks or keeping the price up.

Reductions brought the price of sugar down to 5 cents a pound, from 5½ cents last week, while wheat flour price reductions averaged about 5 per cent.

Father Cox Planning March on Washington

Pittsburgh, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Rev. James R. Cox, Catholic priest of Pittsburgh, who led an army of unemployed on Washington four years ago, announced today he will head another "march" on the Capital Sunday.

The "marchers" will be composed of backers of the Townsend plan for old-age pensions, and will aravel by bus and private automobile.

Father Cox said he won't be disappointed if his group is small is small. He added:

"The young folk are working—lots of them—on WPA jobs, and the old people can't go."

Prices of Commodities Advance 4 Per Cent

Wholesale commodity prices started 1936 with a .4 per cent rise during its first week, according to the report of Commissioner Lubin, of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the index now stands at 80.6 per cent of the 1926 average, an increase of 4 per cent, compared with a year ago and only .1 per cent below the high point of last September.

The increase since the depression's low point of March 4, 1933, has been 36 per cent. Agricultural and food products were responsible for most of last week's rise, as the major industrial group of commodities remained unchanged.

Bonus to Pass House Today

While the House debate raged, Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, Congressional expansionist leader, called at the White House and later introduced in the Senate his bill for paying the bonus by alternative inflation methods.

The united veterans' measure, carried to the point of a vote in the House last night, is merely an authorization bill, appropriates no funds, and proposes no method of financing the bonus. Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), Texas, who wanted to finance payment with expanded currency, finally joined forces behind the "united front" bill, under an agreement not to force the inflation issue until some later date.

Thomas to Push Issue.

Senator Thomas, however, said he plans to press the issue as soon as the bonus comes to a Senate show-down. His plan, introduced in the Senate yesterday, provides alternative methods of currency expansion to be used at the President's discretion.

At the outset, he proposes a $2,225,000,000 appropriation for bonus payment. To pay this, he asks that currency be issued against $700,000,000 of silver and $1,250,000,000 of free gold in the Treasury.

His alternative plan calls for a Government bond issue, to be deposited in Federal Reserve banks, which in turn would issue bonus checks to the veterans. The banks would be paid a carrying charge Thomas estimates at less than ¾ of 1 per cent. The bonds would be retired over a period of 20 years, by appropriations of $100,000,000 a year. Presumably, the initial inflation plan would be used as a club to force the Federal Reserve banks to agree to the second alternative.

Plans Uncertain.

Bonus plans in the Senate are in a state of uncertainty, due to the desire of some Senate veterans' leaders to shape a bill that the President might accept. Lacking guidance from the White House, it was said the Vinson-Patman-McCormack bonus bill may be given right of way in the Senate.

Representatives of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans' united this year for the first time on the bonus issue, watched last night from the galleries as their measure ran the House gauntlet without so much as the crossing of a t.

Robber Is Slain By Police; Wife Helps Lay Trap

Robert Moore, Bank Bandit, Said to Have Boasted He Killed Buckley.

By the Associated Press.

South Bend, Ind., Jan. 9.—Sheriff's deputies, using a machine gun at close range, shot down a bank robbery suspect today and a few hours after he died officers investigated a report he may have been responsible for the unsolved assassination in 1930 of Gerald E. Buckley, Detroit radio political commentator.

Sheriff Roy H. Wolfe said Robert Moore, 40, was spotted at a filling station hideout near South Bend after his wife, recently convicted of robbing the State Bank of Twin Lakes, Minn., gave information as to his whereabouts. Moore, the sheriff said, had been hunted since the $1,000 holdup of the First National Bank of Hunter, N. Dak., September 3, 1931.

At St. Paul, Superintendent Melvin C. Passolt, of the Minnesota State Crime Bureau, quoted Mrs. Mary Roche Moore as saying her husband told her he killed Buckley in a Detroit hotel lobby July 23, 1930. Mrs. Moore is serving a 5-to-40 year term in the Woman's Reformatory at Shakopee, Minn.

Doubt Moore Involved.

Doubt that Moore was involved in the Buckley killing was expressed at Detroit by Chief of Detectives Henry W. Piel. He said, however, Moore's widow will be questioned by police investigators.

Three men opened a fusillade at close range on Buckley in the hotel two hours after he had announced the success of a fight for recall of Mayor Charles Bowles. Buckley also had waged a war on gambling. A definite motive for his killing was not established.

Three men—Ted Pizzino, Angelo Livevchi and Joe Bommarito—were tried and acquitted April 21, 1931. Three other men and a woman named in the indictment as parties to the alleged plot never were prosecuted.

Superintendent Passolt at St. Paul quoted Mrs. Moore as saying she married Moore at Wakefield, Mich., June 18, 1931, and that her husband admitted killing Peter Karaba, Moquah, Wis., storekeeper, the next day and recounted subsequent robberies at Sturgis, Mich.; Pinconning, Mich., and Janesville, Ohio.

Trapped and Killed.

Moore was trapped this morning by five deputies who found him lying fully dressed on a cot. As they entered he pulled a revolver from each sleeve and the officers cut loose with a machine gun. Moore's guns clattered to the floor.

Sheriff Wolfe said the deputies found in Moore's coupe a heavy-caliber rifle and 200 rounds of ammunition. The automobile, the sheriff reported, was stolen December 18 from Homer S. Schwartz, of Welcome, Minn.

Removed to the hospital where he died, Moore refused to talk except to request a telegram be sent to his mother, Mrs. A. H. Buhler, of Mackinaw City, Mich.

Year Is Deathless For Rail Riders

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—A new record—a year without the loss of a life of a passenger in a train accident—was claimed for American railroads today.

"Not a single passenger was killed in an accident on a train during 1935," asserted Harry Guy Taylor, chairman of the Western Association of Railway Executives. "Contrast this with the slaughter on the highway."

The National Safety Council has estimated that 36,400 persons died in motor vehicle accidents last year.

Taylor said he believed it was the first time in history that the railroads had achieved a perfect record in that respect. He recalled at least a dozen passengers were killed in railroad mishaps in the 1933-34 period.

He pointed to the planning and safety measures developed during the last 25 years as the major factors in averting fatalities.

Santo Domingo Gone; Now It's Trujillo City

Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, Jan. 9 (AP).—This city, the oldest existing settlement of white men in the new world, will change its name tomorrow to that of its present dictator. Then it will not be "Santo Domingo," the name given it by the Spanish conquistadores, but "Cuidad Trujillo," (Trujilli City) in honor of its president and dictator, Gen. Rafael Leonidas Trujillo.

Santo Domingo was founded in 1496. The Senate approved a measure last night changing the name and the Chamber of deputies passed on it today.

Brooklyn Boy, 12, Hunted In Desert Two Days, Is Found

Alfred Altman Wandered From Governess' Auto Just as a Joke.

By the Associated Press.

Indio, Calif., Jan. 9.—Twelve-year-old Alfred Altman, whose "joke" caused scores to search lonely Painted Desert, was found today near the spot where he disappeared Tuesday.

Alfred, son of Joseph Altman, Brooklyn, N. Y., salesman, told searchers he wandered away from his governess' automobile "as a joke."

"I heard you calling me yesterday afternoon," he said after the 48-hour hunt ended. "But I just didn't feel like talking to anybody. I want some breakfast right away."

Dr. C. S. Johnson, Mecca physician, said the boy suffered no ill effects from hunger and two cold nights spent in the desert. Apparently he had passed most of the time in a shallow cave near the mouth of Painted Canyon.

The boy was taken to Mecca to join his governess, Miss Miriam Reed, 24, New York. She said he disappeared during a search for curios in the canyon. She feared he might have been kidnaped.

"It's so wonderful I can scarcely believe it," his mother said in Brooklyn when she learned Jerry Roberts, leader of the searchers, had found the boy. She and her husband sent him to California two months ago for his health. He was suffering from a nervous condition.

On a camping expedition with Miss Reed, her brother, Charles, and their cousin, Horton Renicke, the boy became separated from the others Tuesday afternoon after telling them he was returning to their parked automobile for a drink of water.

The Reeds and Renicke searched for him until sunset, then notified authorities.

Deputy Sheriff Ben De Crevecour and volunteers carried on a day and night search of the canyon and adjacent barren desert lands.

At the time the lad was found, sheriff's deputies were considering a possibility he may have been kidnaped by motorists. Miss Reed said a party of motorists who apparently had been drinking was near her car when she drove into the desert.

Taximan Backs Hauptmann

Bruckman, a New York taxicab driver, and it tended to blacken the tombstone of Isidor Fisch with complicity in the Lindbergh crime. C. Lloyd Fisher, of Hauptmann's counsel, hurried to New York and took an affidavit on Bruckman's story.

That story was:

Shortly after the Lindbergh ransom was paid, April 2, 1932, Bruckman parked his cab at Columbus Circle in New York. Fisch came up to him and started a discussion about how much it would cost to hire a cab for a journey around the country. Finally Fisch told him that he had come into possession of a considerable amount of "hot money," which he didn't dare dispose of in New York. Fisch offered to buy Bruckman a new cab after they returned from the journey.

Was Called at Trial.

Bruckman said he and Fisch were good friends and that they once worked together in a bakery. Even then, Fisch was wasted by tuberculosis and not long after that he went to Germany and died.

At the Flemington trial Bruckman was called as a witness, but as soon as defense counsel asked him to relate his conversation with Fisch, Attorney General David T. Wilentz objected that conversation with a man now dead was inadmissible. The court sustained the objection and Bruckman was excused.

Hauptmann contends Fisch gave him the ransom money that was found in the Bronx garage. Throughout the trial his lawyers attempted to prove that Fisch conceived and executed the crime and then unloaded on Hauptmann $14,000 worth of incriminating ransom money. To combat this, the State brought Fisch's sister from Germany and had her testify that her brother lived and died in poverty and came home with a small suitcase containing a pitifully small wardrobe.

Faulkner Clew Again.

Gov. Harold G. Hoffman said today he had received a letter from New York City Signed "J. J. Faulkner." This letter, he said, declared Hauptmann was innocent of murder and that the "worst he should get is life in prison." It was significant, Hoffman said, because on the day gold notes were turned in at President Roosevelt's order, there was $2,980 worth of Lindbergh ransom money exchanged for other currency at a New York bank and the name on the slip was "J. J. Faulkner."

Police found record of a J. J. Faulkner—but he was dead. There was no way he could be connected with possession of Lindbergh ransom money. What startled Hoffman today was that the signature of the letter closely resembled the handwriting on the deposit slip. He sent the two specimens of handwriting to an expert for analysis.

The calmest man in all this turmoil was Hauptmann. He waited patiently for an answer to his request to appear personally before the court of pardons Saturday and argue for his life. Into the death house today went the Rev. John Matthiesen, Luthern clergyman, who will read Hauptmann down the 30 paces to the execution room if all appeals fail.

Matthiesen said Hauptmann still said he was innocent and that he could not confess because he had no knowledge of the Lindbergh murder.

4 Die in Chair

by Robert Elliott, executioner, in 18 minutes.

The four had been hopeful to the last that Gov. Lehman would grant them reprieves or commute their sentences to life imprisonment.

Their hope for clemency had been based on the knowledge that Nelson Clark, sentenced to 15 years in Sing Sing for receiving stolen property, had written the Governor taking the blame for having "started these young men on their downward paths."

None of the four made statements in the last few minutes preceding their deaths. Gilbride was the coolest. He smoked a cigarette as he was led into the death chamber, accompanied by Father John McCaffrey, Catholic chaplain, who chanted a prayer.

Father McCaffrey also accompanied Orley and Angelini. The Rev. Anthony N. Petersen, Protestant chaplain, walked with Raymond. Raymond prayed as he was taken to the chair.

Raymond's father had requested Warden Lewis E. Lawes for permission to accompany his son to console him in the last moments, but this was refused.

Raymond's Record Here Good.

Newman Raymond, the Alexandria youth who died in the Sing Sing electric chair last night, gave the police of the nearby Virginia city no trouble when he lived there. He worked with his father and two brothers in the building business.

Maj. Newman Raymond, his father, made frantic efforts to save the boy from the chair, but Gov. Lehman was deaf to his pleas.

His son, Maj. Raymond said, had no hand in the shooting of Policeman Killian, but merely went along with the other three as a "lark."

Gen. Craig Makes Presentation for Excellence in Training.

Chester Morrill, jr., 3908 Ingomar street northwest, commander of the local high school cadet corps in 1932, had a "trip to Washington" yesterday as his reward for outstanding work in C. M. T. C. training last year.

The "trip to Washington" was not the only award. Sharing honors with eight other youths, representing civilian military training camps throughout the country, Morrill stood at attention while Gen. John J. Jershing medals for distinguished attainment in military education were presented the group by Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff, United States Army.

A notable gathering attended the presentations in Gen. Craig's office in the State, War and Navy Building. The youths were afterward guests of honor at a luncheon at the Mayflower.

A youth from each of the Nation's corps areas was picked for outstanding accomplishments. Morrill was chosen from the Third Corps Area. The Washington trip, with feting and honors, was the reward.

Morrill came downtown to take part in the ceremonies and accompany the group on a sightseeing tour. The out-of-town delegation arrived Wednesday and will leave tonight.

Morrill was awarded the M. T. C. A. Medal in 1933 for training work at Camp Meade. In 1934 he was awarded the camp-commander's medal and in 1935, the Reserve Officers' Association Medal. He is now a student at American University and was classed as "best qualified for commission" in the Third Corps Area.

Among guests and speakers at yesterday's luncheon were Lieut. Col. George E. Ijams, commander in chief of the Military Order of the World War; Capt. C. Ray Murphy, National commander of the American Legion; James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; M. A. Harlan, national commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War; Brig. Gen. Edwin S. Hartshorn, of the General Staff; Lieut. Col. E. E. Lombard, French military attache and other Army men.

Chosen with Morrill as outstanding trainees were Philip H. Johnson, jr., Milton, Mass.; Robert F. Stockton, Trenton, N. J.; Bennett Napier, jr., Rockingham, N. C.; Wallace O. Shankle, Fulton, Ky.; William A. Hollister, Aurora, Ill.; Dale E. Means, St. Joseph, Mo.; Raymond H. Marshall, McAllen, Tex., and Malcolm O. Donohoo, Los Angeles, Calif.

$35,000,000 Grant By PWA Opposed

A Public Works Administration loan of $35,971,910 to the South Carolina Service Authority for the construction of a hydro-electric plant on the Santee and Cooper Rivers, near Pinopolis, S. C., was threatened yesterday when the Carolina Power & Light Co., of Raleigh, N. C., asked the District Supreme Court to issue an injunction banning the loan.

The company contended it has been earning a gross revenue of about $9,000,000 a year and that since 1926 it had reduced electric rates about 50 per cent for its 70,000 customers. If the PWA loan eventually goes through, the company said, its entire investment will be disastrously jeopardized.

The judge granted the company a temporary restraining order and set the suit for a permanent injunction for hearing here January 17.

Army Plane Wrecked In Landing at Mineola

Mineola, N. Y., Jan. 9 (AP).—An Army bombing plane was wrecked in a forced landing today in a field just west of Mineola. The crew escaped injury except for a slight leg cut received by Capt. D. T. Craw.

The plane was a twin-motored ship from the first bombardment squadron, Mitchel Field, Mineola. Members of the crew blamed jamming of the controls for the accident. Maj. E. J. Carpenter was in command. Staff Sgt. E. A. Sell was the third man aboard.

3 Dead in England.

London, Jan. 9 (AP).—Three persons were killed, many injured and widespread damage was caused tonight by the second violent storm of the week in the British Isles.

The gale reached a force of 100 miles an hour, Pewbroke Lighthouse reported. Ships were sent scurrying to shelter from huge waves. Damage ashore was heavy.

Southwest England and the Irish Free State were the hardest hit. A fierce storm swept the Dublin district, causing much damage. Mountainous seas in the English Channel and Irish Sea dislocated shipping.

The steamship Manhattan, of the United States Lines, which carried members of the American winter Olympics teams, was unable to call at Cobh, Irish Free State, for the first time in years. The ship continued on to Plymouth, where passengers had to wait seven hours before they could disembark as the hawsers linking the vessel and its tender were broken repeatedly.

Lifeboats Called.

Three lifeboats were called out at South Devon, where a small vessel, believed to be French, flashed distress signals by a lamp, off the jagged rocks of Holthead.

The storm followed by only a few days a gale in which nearly 30 persons were killed in and around the British Isles.

District's Ratio High in Federal Revenue Table

Washingtonians Pay .46 Per Cent of All Tax Collections.

Washington, although it contains only .39 per cent of the Nation's population, contributed to the Federal Government .46 per cent of the total internal revenue collections during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1935, Commissioner of Internal Revenue Helvering disclosed yesterday in his annual report.

Even higher proportionally was the District's payment in income taxes, which were placed at .74 per cent. In this urban community, the report revealed, agricultural adjustment taxes were low at .03 per cent. The per capita of total collections from the National Capital to the Federal Government thus was in excess of its .39 per cent of the population.

In compilation of the average, the population figure used was 497,000, based on an estimate of the Census Bureau as of July 1, 1934, making the District's percentage of the population of the Nation .39.

Miscellaneous internal revenue collections for the District totaled $4,442,497.44—more than that paid by each of 23 States and Territories.

The District paid income taxes totaling $8,195,647.23 during the fiscal year, or .74 per cent of the total for the country.

Shocked Young Called Reformers of Parents

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—A younger generation, shocked by the "goings on" of its fathers and mothers, says Margery Wilson, feminine psychologist, is leading the old folks into more conservative modes of living.

Miss Wilson told the National Council of Administrative Women in Education today that she has received several thousand letters in recent months from boys and girls between 15 and 21 displaying unhappiness over lower standards observed in adult members of their families.

She said the youngsters are "shocked by the crudity and grossness" of their fathers and mothers and that the power of their disapproval "is putting a quietus on vulgarity."

New Jersey Township Fights Housing Project

Attorneys representing Franklin Township, N. J., and four of its property holders yesterday carried to the United States Court of Appeals their fight to prevent the Government from proceeding with the establishment of a model community of low-cost houses. Last week Chief Justice A. A. Wheat, in the District Supreme Court, ordered the suit, thus enabling the Rural Resettlement Administration to proceed with its plans.

The law firm of Covington, Burling, Rubling, Acheson and Shorb yesterday asked the appellate court to hold up the project pending a settlement by that court of the dispute, scheduled to be heard February 3.

Missing Chicago Widow Found Dead in Atlanta

Atlanta, Jan. 9 (AP).—A 37-year-old Chicago widow, Mrs. Pearl Miller, who disappeared more than a week ago while driving from Miami to her home, was found dead today on the rear seat of her automobile parked in a garage here.

Detective Douglas Poole, who said "I don't see how death could have been caused by carbon monoxide gas," announced his investigation centered on the woman's neck and a bruise on her head.

Russians Seize Two Japanese Military Fliers

Pair Said to Have Tried Kidnaping in Siberia; Geneva Worried.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Paris, Jan. 9.—Germany takes the gravest view of the new military working arrangement between the French and British general staffs, the United Press was informed tonight by an unofficial but authoritative spokesman in Paris.

He stressed that as long as the agreement, by which the entire army, navy and air forces of Britian and France can be co-ordinated and thrown together on a moment's notice, involves the Franco-German frontier, Germany refuses to take as explanation the argument that the agreement was reached merely to insure that France and Britain will be able to fulfill obligations under the League of Nations pact.

German circles here therefore expect strong reaction from Berlin. Unless Germany is given some kind of "concrete" guarantee from England demonstrating that no common Franco-British action against Germany is even remotely contemplated, the Berlin government may do one of two things:

1. Bring up the question of whether the military agreement violates the Locarno Treaty.

2. Declare that Germany no longer feels obligated to maintain the demilitarized character of the Rhineland zone, and plans fortifications to match France's northern chain of "impregnable" fortresses.

The spokesman emphasized that the military agreement, if it has no counterpart sufficiently reassuring to Germany, definitely forestalls all conversations on armaments limitation at this time.

He said formal assurance the agreement was purely defensive and effective only in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian threat to European peace would not be sufficient to reassure the German government. He said that such a guarantee was a matter of definition of words, and would be of questionable value in case of a military emergency. Reassurance, he said, would have to take a more definite form.

He pointed out that the German frontiers, as well as the French and Belgian, are protected by the Locarno Treaty, and that steps to assure this protection concretely would be the only thing acceptable to Germany in view of the fortifications and military preparations on the French side of the frontier.

Paris School Shut In Pro-Italy Riot

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 9.—A pro-Italian student demonstration against Prof. Gaston Jeze, Ethiopia's legal adviser at Geneva, during which he was pelted with bags of flour and books, resulted tonight in the closing of the Law School of the University of Paris.

Prof. Jeze upheld the Ethiopian side in discussions before the League of Nations last year.

The professor, whose classes were interrupted by rioting pro-Italian students in November, attempted to resume his lectures today, but was forced to flee under a barrage of missiles after facing the jeers of the members of his class for 35 minutes.

The pro-Italian students followed the professor to the faculty rooms, where he took refuge, and broke down a door in an effort to find him. They were dispersed, however, when the dean of the law school warned that he would call police.

Mario Roustan, French minister of education, ordered the school closed indefinitely. The students planned to strike unless Prof. Jeze, who refused to resign, was ousted.

Soviet Bag Lands After Eclipse Hop

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Jan. 9. — A substratosphere balloon crew which passed through 2½ miles of clouds landed tonight near Gorky, 250 miles from its Moscow starting point, to report a successful observation of last night's eclipse of the moon.

It carried the prominent Soviet astronomer, Prof. Floria, and was piloted by the stratosphere flier, Zille. They had expected to ascend 5 miles.

Heavy clouds prevented observation of the eclipse from the ground. The astronomer Uropkin attempted to study it from an airplane at Leningrad, but ice forming on the wings forced him to land.

Peru Acts Against Japanese Cotton

Lima, Peru, Jan. 9 (AP).—The government today fixed a quota of 612,714 gross kilograms (about 1,347,970 pounds) on Japanese cotton fabrics for 1936, but canceled decrees by the finance ministry which fixed quotas on such imports from other countries. The Japanese allowance is a 50 per cent increase over the quota of last year.

and Dr. Madsen injected restoratives. It was no use. At 9:05, the doctor said he couldn't be revived."

From Marlene Dietrich, beautiful German actress, who was Gilbert's most recent feminine companion, came the information that the actor had a severe heart attack about a month ago.

"He was swimming in the pool at his home," she said. "But after the attack, he just laughed and said it was indigestion."

When Gilbert was divorced by his fourth wife, bronze-haired Virginia Bruce, in May, 1934, one of her charges was that he used intoxicants to excess.

Miss Bruce was prostrated at news of his death. Her father issued a statement that it was "a terrible shock to her."

Their friendship continued after the divorce, as did that between Gilbert and his first three mates—Olivia Burwell, Leatrice Joy and Ina Claire.

Those four marriages were milestones in his life. The success of his personal life seemed to move in an inverse ratio to that of his professional career — as success came, marital happiness went.

Charles Greene, John Gilbert's business manager, placed the value of the actor's estate "in the neighborhood of $200,000."

It was recalled that Gilbert settled $42,500 on his fourth wife, Virginia Bruce, when they were divorced.

True to the stage and screen tradition, John Gilbert was the perfect lover in make believe, the troubled and unsuccessful husband in real life.

Most interesting of his marital ventures, from a Washington standpoint, was his elopement to Las Vegas, Nev., with the Capital-born Ina Claire in 1929. His marriage to the stage and film comedienne was Gilbert's third trip to the altar. It was dissolved by divorce in 1931.

The romantic Utahan was a Hollywood extra when in 1917, he took a Mississippi girl, Olivia Burwell, as his bride. His first marriage was destined to last the longest, five years. Leatrice Joy, star of the "silents," became Mrs. Gilbert No. 2 in March, 1923. A daughter was born of this union. The couple was divorced in August, 1924.

Coincidence or otherwise, Gilbert was matrimonially unattached during the height of his career. Between the awarding of a final decree to Miss Joy in 1924, and his whirlwind courtship of Miss Claire five years later, he made such outstanding hits as "The Big Parade," in which he had probably his greatest role; "The Merry Widow," with Mae Murray; "Flesh and the Devil," "Love," and "A Woman of Affairs," with Greta Garbo, and numerous others.

Persistently, during this prosperous period, Gilbert's name was linked with Miss Garbo's.

In May, 1929, he married Ina Claire. Final divorce papers were granted in August, 1932. The interim, which saw the introduction of "talkies," marked the beginning of Gilbert's decline as a screen actor. "His voice won't do," said the film moguls. He spoke in a high pitch, like Jack Dempsey.

It was only a matter of days after his divorce from Miss Claire that "handsome Jack" took the marriage vows with an up and coming film actress, Virginia Bruce. Her real name was Virginia Helen Briggs, and she was a member of the circle which had graduated from the "Ziegfeld Follies" to the West Coast movie lots.

The following year they became the parents of a baby daughter, Susan Ann. Soon afterward there was a trial separation. On May 25, 1934, Mrs. Gilbert No. 4 received a divorce decree in Los Angeles after a three-minute hearing, during which she described the celluloid leading man of Greta Garbo as "arrogant, violent and abusive."

John Gilbert, his real name was John Pringle, was born July 10, 1897, in Logan, Utah. His parents were traveling players. As an infant he made his stage debut by being carried onstage in an Eddie Foy production. He was educated "in public schools all over the country," as one biography puts it, and at Hitchcock Military Academy, San Rafael, Calif.

Graduated from the academy, he became a salesman. His inherent love for the play boards put an end to that and he joined a Spokane, Wash., stock company as stage manager in 1915. He was discharged for ringing down the curtain too soon on an act of "Alias Jimmy Valentine." He pleaded for reinstatement, and won, only to be with the company when it went broke.

Herschell Mayall, whom many old-time stage and movie fans will remember, is credited with introducing Gilbert to the motion picture business. Starting out as an extra, he was soon under contract—at $30 or $40 a week.

"Apostle of Vengeance," vintage 1917, was his first starring vehicle. It was made for Thomas Ince. The old First National Co. gave him a leading role in Mary Pickford's "Heart of the Hills" in 1919.

"The Merry Widow" and "The Big Parade" of 1925 established Gilbert's position as a motion picture star of the first magnitude. Successive pictures, several of them with Greta Garbo, maintained his popularity and box office appeal. What Clark Gable has been to the talking screen, Jack Gilbert was to the late "silents."

In the last few years Washington and the rest of the country looked upon such of his talking pictures as "Way for a Sailor," "The Captain Hates the Sea" and, once more with Garbo, "Queen Christina."

Ethiopia Claims Italian Defeat In Dolo Region

By the Associated Press

Addis Ababa, Jan. 9.—Ethiopia claimed a smashing victory on the southern front today to add to a major success in the north.

A strong Italian push in the southern Dolo region, said well-informed sources, was thrown back in a battle involving more than 100,000 soldiers.

An official announcement said the Fascist invading northern army had abandoned the Tembien region west of Makale in a "precipitious" fashion. Heavy rains were understood to be washing out roads and adding to the enemy's discomfiture.

Emperor Haile Selassie's son-in-law, Ras Desta Demtu, commander of the southern armies, was reported to have wired the government that he had frustrated a fresh Italian attempt to invade the rich Rift Valley west of Dolo.

Participating in the engagement were 60,000 Ethiopian warriors against 18,000 Italians and 25,000 Somalis, the report stated.

Travelers from the north said many roads between Makale, the advance northern Italian post, and Addis Ababa have been washed out.

The government said the Italians abandoned one tank and one truck "without resistance."

These reports served to set at rest the fears of superstitious natives who were greatly alarmed last night—all because of an eclipse of the moon. They believed it "a bad augury and the work of the Italians."

German Idle Increase.

Berlin, Jan. 9 (AP).—Germany's unemployed increased 522,354 to a total of 2,506,806 in December, it was announced today. The total, however, was 100,000 under December of 1934.

Aid to Red Suspect Under Arrest in Rio

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 9 (AP).—Capt. Miranda Correa announced today the arrest of Franzer Juber, who he said acted as secretary for Harry Berger, held on a charge of communistic activities.

Berger and a woman identified as his wife, who gave her name as Machfa Leucsky Berger, were arrested December 26, it was announced early this week. Police said they had United States passports which appeared authentic.

The jailing of Berger, political observers said, appeared to have eased the tension which has existed in Brazil since the crushing of the December revolt.

Franco-British Pact Stirs Berlin

Moscow (Friday), Jan. 10.—The Soviet army is questioning two Japanese military aviators who landed in Siberia, near Vladivostok, and attempted to kidnap a Russian peasant, presumably as part of a plan to obtain military information, it was announced officially today.

The aviators and their airplane were captured by Soviet frontier troops after the peasant they attempted to capture had overpowered one of them, it was asserted.

At the same time it was announced at headquarters of the Soviet Far Eastern army in Habarovsk that four other Japanese military agents had been captured in Siberia, near the frontiers of Manchukuo, since December 26.

Geneva (Friday) Jan. 10 (U.P.).—League circles were gravely concerned today over reports that a Japanese airplane landed in Soviet territory without authorization by the Russian government.

While it is recognized that the incident is only one of a series of disquieting episodes in Soviet-Japanese relations, it is felt generally that if the report is true, the incident constitutes a more serious threat than ever to peace of the Far East.

Alarm at Naval Demonstration Denied by Italy

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Jan. 9.—Italy expressed no alarm over forthcoming French and British naval maneuvers today, but it was disclosed that Fascist troops are stationed near the French border despite the manpower drain of the African campaign.

Flag ceremonies held because of Queen Elena's 63d birthday yesterday showed Italy's army of 1,000,000 men is at full strength.

A dispatch from Asti, near the French border in northwestern Italy, said a flag was presented to a regiment in that neighborhood.

Rome scoffed at rumors that the January French and British naval maneuvers are a demonstration against her. It was stated authoritatively that the Italians are "certain" France would not demonstrate against this country.

Italy is "satisfied," these sources said, with French explanations of the maneuvers.

Ethiopia's charge that Italy used poison gas in Africa also was denied, along with reports an Egyptian Red Cross hospital was bombed.

The presence of several divisions back of the French border, it was insisted in authoritative circles here, does not mean a regarrisoning of the frontier.

They pointed out that only special units were withdrawn when France and Italy reached an accord a year ago and said the main bodies of soldiers were never taken away.

Despite professions of satisfaction with the French explanation, the government is watching closely the French Mediterranean maneuvers. They will bring 92 warships off Corsica, while British ships hold a "spring cruise" near Gibraltar.

Italy's artillery went into action in northern Ethiopia, a government communique disclosed. It said:

"On the front south of Makale our artillery dispersed numerous enemy groups approaching Gabat.

"The aviation bombarded lightly armed troops sighted in the northern Tzellemti sector. There is nothing of note to report in other sections of the Eritrean and Somaliland fronts."

More mountain-climbing Alpine troops went to Africa today.

Mission Council Of Methodists Comes to Close

Chinese Woman Physician's Address Ends Meeting With Optimism.

The Southern Methodist Missionary Council, which drew 2,000 delegates to the Capital this week, closed with a note of optimism yesterday afternoon as Dr. Enmei Yui, Chinese woman doctor, of Changchow, China, pointed to the achievements of Christian missionaries from America.

Missionaries, she claimed, were largely responsible for the privileges Chinese women enjoy today, and for the promise of a new social order in the Orient.

Dr. Enmei, who is doing research work in the field of gynecology at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, said, "the inferior position of women in China has been due to the teachings of Confucius, who taught 'perfect submission.' Now the women have overcome the first obstacles, but are confronted by other problems. Certain features of Western civilization have been adopted before the country has been ready for them and have led to hostility from the older people and the conservatives."

A final session scheduled for last night was omitted when Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who was to be the principal speaker, canceled her address because of a severe cold.

At morning and afternoon sessions the Methodists discussed problems facing the mission enterprise, not only in foreign fields, but also in the United States. Bishop A. Frank Smith, of Houston, Tex., charged the denomination was failing to reach rural sections. He said that after pooling their resources, churches of the South are able to reach only one in every three of 27,000,000 rural people.

"Bringing the matter to Southern Methodists, the church is making no impression on the 17,000,000 unchurched folk in the denomination's rural territory, whereas their denominational responsibility for the 12,000,000 unchurched rural whites is 1,500,000," the bishop said.

Dr. J. M. Ormond, professor of rural sociology at Duke University, Durham, N. C., pleaded for "a square deal for the rural sections.

Awarded Ribbons for Being Physically Fit

'Practically Perfect' Children At Kindergarten Win Ribbons

Blue ribbons were pinned yesterday on 24 "practically perfect" kindergarten pupils at John Burroughs Public School, 1820 Monroe street northeast.

The awards for "100 per cent physical fitness" were made by the Parent-Teacher Association of the District, with Mrs. P. C. Ellett, District P.-T. A. round-up chairman, pinning on the ribbons.

All the youngsters won their good health honors last May 1, at the annual P.-T. A. summer round-up of pre-sechool age children. Physical examinations were given and charts were made at that time. But the presenting of awards was delayed until yesterday, with the first daytime meeting of the Burroughs P.-T. A.

Mary Pickford's Divorce Effective

By the Associated Press

Hollywood, Jan. 9.—Mary Pickford, who becomes a free woman tomorrow, hid herself from the curious tonight and let rumors of a new romance go unanswered.

At noon on January 10, 1935, the former star—long called "America's Sweetheart"—heard Judge Ben Lindsey announce that her interlocutory decree of divorce from Douglas Fairbanks was granted—thus bringing to an end Hollywood's 15-year-old No. 1 romance.

With the final decree due tomorrow, movieland began speculating on future romance that might enter her life. Her name and that of Charles (Buddy) Rogers, actor turned orchestra leader, have been linked romantically since 1933.

Rep. Hoeppel and Son Ask Conspiracy Retrial

Representative John H. Hoeppel, of California, and his son, Charles J. Hoeppel, today will appear in District Supreme Court to listen to arguments their attorneys will make in an effort to secure new trials for them, following their conviction several weeks ago of conspiring to sell an appointment to West Point.

Government witnesses testified James W. Ives, Johns Hopkins University and Olympic athlete, gave a $1,000 note in payment for an appointment to the academy.. Ives reported the affair to War Department officers, and the subsequent investigation resulted in indictment and conviction of the father and son.

U. S. Trade Pact Signed by Swiss; Tenth in Series

Watch-Smuggling Curb Is Included in Mutual Commerce Treaty.

The tenth in the series of reciprocal trade agreements negotiated by Secretary of State Cordell Hull was signed yesterday by Secretary Hull and Marc Peter, Swiss Minister to Washington, on behalf of their governments.

Trade between the United States and Switzerland in 1929 totaled more than $94,000,000, but dropped in 1932 to less than $35,000,000. With depression conditions lightened since then, the trade moved up slightly in 1934, although still less than $40,000,000.

Reductions in Swiss duties are few, but many exisiting rates have been "bound" against further increase, and the Swiss quota, or permit system, has been relaxed considerably. This, according to officials, was the primary purpose of the negotiations.

On 19 typical American products Switzerland granted new and liberalized quotas, chiefly on wheat, fresh and dried fruits, lard, rice, lumber, automobiles and petroleum products. American exports of these products may be doubled under the new quotas, which affect about 40 per cent of imports into Switzerland from the United States.

Switzerland will reduce duties on ten items, principally lard, prunes, dried apricots, preserved fruits, preserved fish, office machines and wallboard. On 19 other commodities important to American commerce, the Swiss government has "bound" the duties. These include Douglas fir, cotton, rice, preserved asparagus, raisins, sausage casings, artificial abrasives, coal-tar derivatives, lubricating greases, passenger automobiles and tires.

The reciprocal tariff concessions and the minimum quotas allotted the United States by Switzerland are to be in force on February 15. The entire agreement is to become effective 30 days after the exchange at Berne of the pacts and articles.

Observers who recalled the statement made before the House Ways and Means Committee on July 30 of last year, by a spokesman for the American Jeweled Watch Manufacturers' association, that nearly 1,000,000,000 Swiss movements were smuggled into the United States in a single year, took note of a adjunct to the agreement in which the Swiss government undertakes to co-operate with American authities in securing watch smuggling. This is usually the concern of the importing country, but Swiss aid at their frontiers in suppressing such activites will aid the American watch industry considerally, it is believed.

The United States' concessions are noted chiefly in reductions of import duties on 59 commodities, with about one third of the rates affected within the watch and clock paragraphs of the tariff act. All rates not in the watch schedule reductions are "bound," three other American tariff rates are bound, and sink bolting cloth for milling comes on the free list. Important commodities affected are certain chemicals, coal-tar dyes, watch movements, machinery, hat braids, Emmenthaler and Gruyere cheese and Swiss textile specialties.

Concessions obtained from Switzerland affect imports from the United States which amounted to $22,148,000 in 1931, and $14,750,000 in 1934. Concessions granted Switzerland by the United States affect commodities which accounted for $14,500,000 of imports from that nation in 1931, and $10,800,000 in 1934.

$500 Fine Proposed For Reckless Drivers

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer proposed to the District Commissioners yesterday that the penalty for a first offense of reckless driving be raised to a fine of $500 or imprisonment for six months.

At present the penalty for a first offense of this character is a $100 fine or a jail sentence of 30 days.

This is one of a series of proposals made by Van Duzer to the Commissioners in the hope of reducing Washington's traffic toll, which last year was 116 lives. The Commissioners are expected to act on the proposal today.

Domestic Allotment Favored

was reflected in still another quarter. Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, contended increase in the circulating money medium would serve farm price purposes. Smith called a meeting of his Agriculture Committee for Monday to consider farm plans "within the strict limits of the Supreme Court's decision."

Two demands upon Congress, stemming from the Supreme Court's AAA decision, were made late yesterday in resolutions adopted by directors of the American Farm Bureau Federation, representing a membership of 500,000 farm families.

First, Congress was asked to appropriate funds from the Treasury to fulfill Federal obligations under AAA contracts covering 1935 and prior thereto.

The second resolution urged enactment of legislation requiring Treasury collections of all processing taxes unpaid up to January 6, and taxation of all such sums now deposited in escrow or impounded under Federal court orders.

Developments on Capitol Hill included:

A Senate bill introduced by Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary to appropriate money for farmers who have fulfilled their part of the AAA crop regulation program.

Another constitutional amendment proposed by Senator M. M. Logan (Democrat), Kentucky, giving Congress the power to create such agencies as the invalidated AAA and NRA.

A farm bill by Senator Robert D. Carey (Republican), Wyoming, authorizing $250,000,000 for the purchase and lease of not to exceed 50,000,000 acres of sub-marginal land, planted in cotton, wheat, corn or other cereals for at least five years prior to purchase or lease.

Opposition to a constitutional amendment as a means of meeting the farm or other "recovery" problems gained ground in Congress, and apparently was not under immediate consideration at any of the Administration conferences.

Summoned to the White House yesterday to confer with the President were Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Attorney General Cummings, Secretary Wallace, Budget Director Bell, Treasury Counsel Herman Oliphant, Chairman Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Farm Administrator Chester Davis, Solicitor General Stanley Reed and Assistant Solicitor Frank J. Wideman.

Await Consultation.

Following the conference, Davis said no plan would be determined until after today's consultation with farm leaders. He indicated Wallace may go over the more workable farm plans proposed, with the farm leaders this morning.

AAA chieftans are hoping to reconstruct a new farm program on an AAA framework. In several usually wel-informed quarters it was said the discussions have centered not only on a long-time substitute, but an immediate agency of quick relief. Talk of a direct subsidy to farmers, under some form used as a means to control such regulation, control or regimentation."

He said the principles underlying the old McNary-Haugen legislaton should be considered in any "long pull towar da permanent farm program."

By the Associated Press.

New Basis Predicted.

Topeka, Kans., Jan. 8.—Alf M. Landon, Republican Governor of Kansas, predicted tonight "some new basis" would be found to supplant the invalidated AAA and urged the Government to "fulfill its existing contractual obligations with the Nation's farmers."

In his first public utterance on the farm problem since his name was mentioned in connection with his party's Presidential nomination, Landon asked Kansas farmers to accept the Supreme Court ruling against the AAA in a "sportsmanlike manner."

"As American citizens, we must remember that the institutions under which this Nation has grown up are more important in the long run than the immediate interests of any single class," he said in an address prepared for delivery before the State board of agriculture.

"* * * if the time should ever come when the citizens of this country should repudiate the acts of the Supreme Court, the very foundation of our social and economic welfare will disappear."

He declared "the Government must find the way to fulfill its existing contractual obligations with the Nation's farmers" under the AAA.

'Incompetence' Blamed for U.S. Entry Into War

Yale Professor Hits Neutrality Bill Pending Before Congress.

By the Associated Press

A professor of international law yesterday blamed "incompetence in executive departments" for plunging this country into the World War, coupling this statement to Congress with a word of caution about the type of neutrality bill that should be enacted.

Prof. Edwin M. Borchard, of Yale, testifying before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the Administration's neutrality bill, said that Congress was "monkeying with the most dangerous buzz-saw in the world."

"The high spot of this bill," he said of the Administration measure, "is that it gives the President power to be just as unneutral as he desires to be, and in my humble opinion the President shouldn't want that power."

Borchard contended the section dealing with export of articles and materials for war purposes would give the President "an absolute discretion to regiment the entire foreign trade of the United States, whenever any foreign war exists anywhere."

Limiting of Act.

He recommended a neutrality act should be limited to an embargo of arms and loans to belligerents; loss of citizenship to Americans enlisting in foreign armies; loss of protection by American citizens who take passage on belligerent ships; closing of United States ports as sources of supply for belligerent vessels at sea, and the treatment of belligerent submarines and armed belligerent merchantmen as war ships when in American ports.

"Beyond that," said Borchard, "the rules of international law, competently administered, would adequately take care of the United States and provide all the safeguards necessary to insure American neutrality."

Borchard and Charles G. Hyde, professor of international law at Columbia University, who followed him on the stand, both agreed mandatory neutrality legislation was necessary.

Freedom of Seas.

Borchard contended the Nation should retain its doctrine of "freedom of the seas," and added this policy had never drawn the United States into war.

"It was not trade, but incompetence in executive departments which drew the United States into the World War," said Borchard.

He added that Americans traveled on the Lusitania and the Sussex, both British ships, despite German warnings, and "took their lives in their own hands."

"The State Department acquiesced in this," Borchard continued. "The Lusitania note should never have been sent. It put President Wilson out on a limb and forced his hand. There is no statutory way to prevent executive incompetence."

Borchard predicted the United States would begin to lose its world markets the day the neutrality bill, as now drawn, was passed. He explained countries will not do business with the United States "when they know they may be cut off at the whim of an executive."

People's Mandate.

The President's defense budget of nearly $1,000,000,000 is "opposed by the people of all parties in every section of the country" because it "undercuts the good neighbor policy" which the President constantly commends as the way to peace, it was said in a statement issued yesterday by Dr. Mary E. Woolley, chairman of the Committee for the People's Mandate to End War.

Dr. Woolley points out that the mandate, in circulation in many parts of the world, demands that governments "stop increase of armaments" and says that thousands of signatures are being received daily at the organization's headquarters in the Willard Hotel.

Eight Drown as Eclipse Scares Peasant in Boat

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Jan. 9 (AP).—The eclipse of the moon last night was believed to be responsible, police said tonight, for the drowning of eight peasants near the village of Chitluk when a boat capsized in the Morava River.

Four women, two children and two men, after observing the Serbian Orthodox Christmas, had to cross the river to their homes. One of the women, noticing the darkened red moon, became so frightened she attempted to jump overboard, and the boat tipped over.

Selassie's Air Adviser On Way to America

Paris, Jan. 9 (AP).—The French flier, Rene Drouillet, chief aviation adviser to Emperor Haile Selassie, is en route to the United States, it was learned today. Drouillet, who returned from Addis Ababa recently asserting he intended to buy airplanes and equipment for Ethiopia, sailed yesterday aboard the Lafayette.

But informed sources recalled that he recently took one American plane to Ethiopia and that it was purchased by the Emperor.

6 Italians Are Deported From Malta as Spies

Valetta, Malta, Jan. 9 (AP).—It was officially announced today that six additional Italians had been deported from the island because British military authorities possessed evidence they were engaging in activities prejudicial to the safety of this Mediterranean fortress.

The Italians were seized in a police raid yesterday. Several others were deported from Malta last autumn on suspicion of espionage.

Denies Bankers Used 'Leverage' on Wilson to Aid Loans.

ward' it must have happened 'because of.'"

"I think the Administration—a Democratic Administration, and I am not a Democrat—had intelligence enough to keep itself informed and alive to the situation," Lamont added.

Say McAdoo Urged Change.

McAdoo was among the first, according to the committee, to urge upon President Wilson the lifting of the ban on flotation of foreign loans. A few days after the Davison conference, it was asserted, McAdoo wrote a letter to Woodrow Wilson, dated August 21, in which he argued for the policy change. The letter was written from North Haven, Me., and addressed, "Dear Governor."

"It is imperative for England to establish a large credit in this country," he told the President. "She will need at least $500,000,000. She can't get this in any other way, at the moment, that seems feasible, except by sale of short-time government notes. Here she encounters the obstacles presented by Mr. Bryan's (William Jennings Bryan, who had been Secretary of State) letter of January 20, 1915, to Senator Stone (then chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee) in which it is stated that 'war loans in this country were disapproved because inconsistent with the spirit of neutrality' etc., and 'this Government has not been advised that any general loans have been made by foreign governments in this country since the President expressed his wish that loans of this character should not be made.'"

Hands Tied, He Adds.

"We have tied our hands so that we cannot help ourselves to help our best customers," McAdoo continued. "The declaration seems to me to be most illogical and inconsistent."

McAdoo said that to "maintain our prosperity we must finance it. Otherwise, it may stop and that may be disastrous."

The committee followed the McAdoo letter with introduction of a series of letters, all marked State Department documents, which the committee said never before had been made public, and all of which bore on the efforts to persuade the Government to lift the ban against flotation of war loans.

The first was a letter to F. A. Delano, vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, from James B. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago. It was dated August 17, 1915.

"To put it bluntly," Forgan wrote, "I would like to know what the attitude of the Government Administration in Washington would be toward the flotation of a large British loan in this country. * * * It would seem to me that the present condition of international exchange would deter the Government from entering any objection to the flotation of such a loan in this country, or to the sale by Great Britain of American securities in this country. One or other of these transactions would seem to be a business necessity at the present time."

The request for information was followed by a number of suggested telegrams, each carefully hiding the nature of the information, that Delano might send to Forgan. One suggestion read, "Paries would take no action either for or against such transaction."

Delano apparently sent Forgan's letter to McAdoo at North Haven, for, according to the State Department record, McAdoo wrote to Robert Lansing, by that time Secretary of State, inclosing the Forgan letter.

McAdoo Again Urges Change.

McAdoo called attention to the fact that Germany already had borrowed $10,000,000 in this country.

"I only mean to direct your attention to the importance of giving very serious thought to the points raised in Mr. Forgan's letter," he told Lansing. "I have always felt it was a mistake for our Government to discountenance in any way the establishment of credits in this country in favor of foreign governments, such credits to be employed in purchasing supplies in this country."

Lansing, who previously had opposed the Bryan policy against flotation of foreign loans, replied on August 26.

"I have read your comments upon the matter of loans to belligerent countries and must say that I concur in your opinion— in fact, from the outset I have held that opinion of such transactions viewed from the legal standpoint rather than from the standpoint of expediency."

The day before, Lansing had written to President Wilson, inclosing the Morgan letter and saying:

"I think we must recognize the fact that conditions have materially changed since last autumn when we endeavored to discourage the flotation of any general loan by a belligerent in this country. The question of exchange and the large debts which result from purchases by belligerent governments require some method of funding these debts in this country."

President Wilson, on the same date, conveyed the opinion that the Government's policy should be changed, but that it should not be "put in writing." He wrote to Lansing:

"My opinion in this matter, compendiously stated, is that we should say that 'parties would take no action either for or against such a transaction,' but that this should be orally conveyed, so far as we are concerned and not put in writing.

"I hope that this is also your own judgment in the matter."

The quotation in the Wilson letter was one of the telegrams suggested by Forgan.

J. P. Morgan & Co. was purchasing agent for both Britain and France. They also were maintaining the sterling market at the behest of Great Britain. George Whitney, Morgan partner, told the committee that it had stopped supporting the market on instructions from London. Within two weeks after the Morgan support was withdrawn the pound had dropped from $4.71¼ to $4.56.

Bryan, from the beginning, had opposed any kind of loan or credit to a belligerent country. The ban against credit arrangements, however, had been lifted on March 31, 1915, but it stood against loan flotations until the note from Wilson to Lansing, in which the President adopted the language of the "suggested" Forgan telegram.

The committee, attempting to show the influence of war on American business, put into the record export figures for a three-year period before the war and for the first three full years of the war. The figures showed that 84 per cent of all "essential implements of war" shipped to Europe in 1915-16-17 were bought for the Allies through J. P. Morgan & Co.

Evidence revealed that it was definitely understood when the agreement finally was made with the British government, and later with the French government, that J. P. Morgan & Co. should act as their purchasing agents in this country, that the firm was not expected to enter into any political or diplomatic activities. Under date of December 28, 1914, Sir Edward Grey, British foreign minister, cabled Sir Cecil Spring Rice, British ambassador to the United States, as follows:

Warns "No Politics."

"The transaction with Morgan is not to be in any way connected with questions of finance or credit. It is proposed to make them agents for all purchasing done by the war office and admiralty during the war in the United States. The whole point is that they should act as an exclusive agency, a system which would, in our opinion, be the best from a business point of view. You will explain to Mr. Morgan that we expect the firm to act simply as a commercial agency and that they must not be drawn into any negotiations of a political nature with the Administration or use any influence to oppose action or legislation supposed to be prejudicial to our interests. Questions of this nature should be left to diplomatic treatment exclusively."

The following day Spring-Rice cabled the London foreign office as follows:

"I have seen Mr. Morgan. In his opinion the arrangement proposed in your telegram under reply would not in any way embarrass the Administration, particularly in view of the fact that it is definitely understood that the arrangement is a purely commercial transaction in furtherance of trade between the United States and Great Britain. He fully understands that the firm is not expected to use political influence and that the business in hand is to be carried on on strictly commercial lines.

"As long as the above understanding is strictly adhered to on both sides, I do not think that any objection will be raised in Congress or by the Administraion."

French Contract Difficult.

The records introduced in evidence indicated that the Morgan partnership had little difficulty obtaining the contract with Great Britain, but that it ran into some competition in getting the French contract.

A letter, also made part of the record, indicated that an effort was being made to have Herrick intercede in favor of the Bonbright Co. and against the Morgans. The letter was written in Cleveland February 15, 1915, by Parmely Herrick, son of the ambassador. It was addressed to F. C. Wolcott, former Senator from Connecticut, at the Bonbright Co. in New York.

Pledges Father's Help.

The letter said:

"It was really excellent news to hear that the French government is thinking of making Bonbright & Co. fiscal agents for their war supplies in this country. I know that it would be beneficial to them to have Bonbright & Co. do this work, and I hope that we will succeed in getting this agency from the French government. I know that father would gladly help in this matter on account of my interest in your company, and I think he has already told Ambassador Jusserand about Bonbright & Co. and of my interest in it, but, as you know, in his position he would be severely criticized if he used any effort in our interest in this matter. I am sure, however, that he would be pleased to say that the reputation of Bonbright & Co. is of the best and that, if given the agency, it would use its best effort for the French government.

"I think it would be advisable for you to see Ambassador Jusserand and tell him about Bonbright & Co. and who is associated with the company. Your personal talk with him would be more beneficial than anything else, and I hope that you will make an effort to see Ambassador Jusserand."

The committee then turned from the purely business arrangement to a suggestion that the Morgan contracts had a considerable political effect. They started this line of questioning with a memorandum written by Paul Warburg to the Federal Reserve Board, of which he was a member, November 13, 1916, immediately following Woodrow Wilson's re-election. It said:

Says U. S. Opposed to War.

"If we look at the map showing the respective Wilson and Hughes pluralities, is it not evident that the Hughes corner in the Northeast represented the 'war business and prosperity first' corner, the element that did not blush to clamor for a high tariff, even after we had hogged it all and had become stronger than all the rest of the world?

"And does not the vote in the West and South indicate that a majority of the Nation considers this European fight as none of our affair and does neither want us to be drawn into it nor see continued this ugly war prosperity? Is not Europe now ready enough for peace so that we may say to our country: We shall ask the belligerents to state their peace terms and shall do our best to bring them together?

"If Germany is unreasonable, then you, bankers and investors of the United States, may find that you want to go on financing England, but if the latter should prove herself unreasonable, then you may find that you will not feel justified in furnishing her the means where with to prolong the war. If the Administration will make its views known, officially or unofficially, bankers will have to heed the warning. Against Washington's even unofficial advices these large transactions cannot be carried through successfully."

Lamont Appears Disturbed.

Lamont appeared considerably disturbed by the line of questioning.

"You talk as if businessmen were wicked enough to want the war prolonged," he said. "There is no argument about the fact that everybody wanted it stopped."

Lamont also objected to reference to the industrial Northeast section of the country benefiting most from the war. He pointed out that cotton and wheat farmers also benefited.

"We don't grow much cotton and wheat in the East," he said. "Isn't it true that the whole country benefited from the war business? But that doesn't mean that the country wanted to get in the war."

Briton Charges Arms Makers Scoff at World

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 9.—A charge that Commander Sir Charles Craven, high official of the Vickers munitions interests, took an attitude that "the more munitions in the world, the merrier for the world," was made today at the British munitions investigation.

Sir Philip Gibbs, novelist and member of the royal commission of private manufacture of arms, made the accusation, adding that he believed Sir Charles regarded with contempt all efforts to restrict world armaments.

Sir Charles, in reply, minimized the danger of armament sales, and declared: "I do not agree that armament firms create war."

The commission adjourned until January 22 after questioning Sir Charles, the managing director of Vickers-Armstrong, Ltd., and director of Vickers, Ltd., for the second successive day.

On both days the correspondence between Sir Charles and the Electric Boat Co. of New London, Conn., came under the investigators' fire.

Although saying he would have worded his letters differently if he had known they would be made public, Sir Charles asserted they contained nothing "which would not bear the closest investigation."

One of the letters, containing the phrase, "My friend at the admiralty will help us," had drawn special attention from the United States Senate munitions investigators.

Sir Philip Gibbs, facing Sir Charles today, declared:

"I suggest that throughout the correspondence with Lawrence Y. Spear, vice president of the Electric Boat Co., you showed a certain levity of mind in regard to the business you were doing."

He asserted armament makers conducted "a dangerous trade," the continual extension of which had "very grave effects on the world."

The Vickers organization, said the official, had had an agreement with the Holland Boat Co. and its successor, the Electric Boat Co., since 1900. The British admiralty, he said, was "fully aware" of the agreement, and in no case was any secret information divulged by Vickers or the American company.

Sir Charles stated during the Washington munitions investigation, Henry R. Carse, now president of the Electric Boat Co., was reported to have expressed belief that the British government had no knowledge of the agreement, but that "this evidence is not correct."

He cited two paragraphs of a letter from the admiralty to the Vickers organization to confirm his point.

American submarines, said Sir Charles, were "undoubtedly the best in the world" in 1914, "when the British government bought a number of these submarines which were built in America."

to enjoy at destination while you ride in comfort by rail

Sound reasoning by travelers steadily increases the number of private motors shipped to California or the Southwest by Santa Fe Fast Freight, while owners themselves travel by train.

There's the obvious joy of having one's own car at destination; the record low cost and simplicity of shipment; the saving of precious days en route; avoidance of uncertain expense, fatigue, and the tricks of winter roads and weather.

When owner's party holds two or more first-class one-way or round-trip rail tickets, extra cost of shipping the car is only 3.6c per mile. (Minimum charge between any two points, $54 for auto and two passengers.)

Changes Asked In Health Unit At Alexandria

Medical Association Secretary Outlines Suggested Reorganization.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 823.

Dr. William B. Wilkins, secretary of the Alexandria Medical Society, has just given out a statement of the position of that body in presenting the city council a series of proposed changes in the city health department to relieve the city health officer of part of the work he now carries on.

Dr. Wilkins states the suggestions are made with the belief that the community will be benefited by the use of city funds in caring for those who are unable to pay for medical care.

The duties of the health office are described by Dr. Wilkins to be specific in nature, the prevention of disease, the inoculation of children against certain maladies, the restraint of infection carriers, the location of foci of infection, tuberculosis surveys in schools and the protection of the community against all illness as far as possible.

The proposals of the medical society are that the health officer be made a full-time salaried position; that the medical clinic now run by the health department be discontinued and a clinic be run by the doctors, and that the city council appoint two physicians to the poor. These doctors are to be recommended by the medical society and appointed by the council for a term of one year, they being in no way connected with the health department.

It is also proposed that the city health officer be recommended by the medical society and appointed by the council, the term of office not being designated. This officer should not have any private practice, but devote his entire time to public health problems.

The medical society suggests that the city council appoint a trained social service worker to prevent those who are able to pay for care from using the facilities of the clinic.

The proposed personnel of the city health office are a health officer, assistant health officer, bacteriologist, medical nurse.

The medical society has made these proposals for the welfare of future generations and for the betterment of the community, it was stated.

The local postoffice officials yesterday made public the record compiled last year, showing business exceeded all records of past years in the Alexandria City postoffice. The volume during the year 1935 totaled $114,974.45.

The annual meeting of the bondholders of Fitzgerald Knights of Columbus Home will be held tonight at 8:15 o'clock in the home. Officers will be elected and a report submitted on the finances of the organization for the past year.

Judge William P. Woolls, of the Corporation Court of Alexandria, has been nominated to succeed himself at the joint caucus of the Virginia House and Senate Democratic majorities, meeting in Richmond Wednesday. Since nominations at the caucus are only for uncontested judgeships, this is considered equivalent to election. The nomination was made by Delegate Maurice Rosenberg, of Alexandria, and seconded by State Senator John W. Rust, of Fairfax.

Harry F. Kennedy, general chairman for the annual President's Birthday Ball on January 30 next, has issued a call for a meeting of the 28 members of that committee for 7:30 o'clock this evening in the corporation courtroom.

An automobile occupied by two colored women, giving the names of Emma Everette, 38, and Ellen Patenty, of Long Island, N. Y., went over the bank at the Potomac Yards bridge yesterday about 8 a. m. Both women escaped with cuts and bruises, while the car was considerably damaged.

Rites Will Be Today For Charles Arnold

Charles Arnold, oldest resident of Merrifield, Va., died early yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George McCoy. Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at 9:30 from the Merrifield Southern Methodist Church and will be followed by interment in Arlington Cemetery.

Arnold was born in Arlene, Germany, August 6, 1846. He came to this country when 7 years old, living in New York City until his marriage. He had been a resident of Merrifield for 66 years. He was a veteran of the War Between the States, having served in Company F, Thirteenth Heavy Artillery of New York. His wife, the former Miss Araminta James, died 12 years ago.

He is survived by seven children, Mrs. E. P. Morse, of Washington; Mrs. George McCoy, of Merrifield, and five sons, A. H. Arnold, of Cherrydale; Essel Arnold, of Clarendon; C. S. Arnold, of Idylwood, and C. P. Arnold and Ira Arnold, of Washington. There are 22 grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren.

Attorney Arrested In Sanitarium Fight

A fist fight disturbed the calm of the Washington Sanitarium, Takoma Park, Md., yesterday.

Burton G. Henson and M. J. Donnelly, lawyers from Tampa, Fla., visited the sanitarium in connection with settling an estate. Donnelly stayed awhile to have several stitches taken in a cut in his mouth.

Heads of 12 Counties Plan War On Cut in Telegraph Pole Levy

Montgomery Commissioners Are Hosts to Other Executives in Parley at Rockville Today to Set Fight on Postal Co. Proposal.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Telephone, Shepherd 2363.

County commissioners from 12 Maryland counties will meet at Rockville at 10 a. m. today to make plans to resist an appeal of the Postal Telegraph-Commercial Cable Co. for a reduction on assessments levied on poles it owns and has installed in the State.

The Montgomery County Board, which will be host to the visiting group, previously agreed to join in the fight, although the reduction asked in Montgomery amounts to only $1,275. Assistance of the local board was sought in order that a united opposition may be offered to the petition.

Opposition is based largely, it has been indicated, on an opinion by the State Board of Tax Appeals, that granting a reduction in this instance might establish a dangerous precedent that would prove costly to county governments.

Today's meeting is expected to name a committee to present the counties' position to the State board and also to employ an attorney to serve as counsel.

Counties joining with Montgomery in the fight are Prince Georges, Garrett, Frederick, Allegany, Washington, Baltimore, Harford, Howard, Anne Arundel, Cecil and Carroll.

Equalization of assessments on Montgomery County real estate at the earliest possible time will be urged on the county commissioners in a resolution to be presented at an open meeting of the Thirteenth District Republican Club, January 25, at 8 p. m., in Woodside Elementary School. The resolution has been approved by the executive committee of the club.

A serious relief problem faces the Montgomery County Welfare Board, Miss Dorothy A. Everson, executive secretary of the board, said yesterday in announcing plans of her group for January.

A shortage of relief funds in Maryland for a time threatened the appropriation for this month, estimated at a minimum requirement of $6,461. A preliminary grant of $4,150 was made by the State, which was sufficient to provide only for families in which there are no employable members, she said. However, this figure has been increased to $6,361 by applying State funds received from the gross receipts tax.

Although expenditures of the board in December were $2,099, Miss Everson declared that "there still remains a serious relief problem in the unmet needs of people who are employed on the WPA program, where the earnings are not sufficient to meet the real needs."

She added that the general relief funds have been relieved somewhat through the granting of old-age pensions. The county now has 51 pensioners who were formerly on the relief rolls.

An estimated population of 57,910 for Montgomery County by July 1, 1936, is forecast in a bulletin issued yesterday by the Maryland department of health. This represents an increase of approximately 1,500 over July 1, 1935.

The Bethesda fire board, governing body of the Bethesda Volunteer Fire Department, has re-elected John A. Dickinson, of Alta Vista, as president for the ensuing year. The board also elected Capt. Frederick O. Smith, vice president; T. R. Ricketts, secretary; John A. P. Farnham, treasurer, and Hiram Musgrove, fire marshal. The executive committee consists of George W. Bryan, Lendell Conner, Capt. E. C. Smith, William H. Buckley and Emory H. Bogley, while S. Walter Bogley, Thomas E. Hampton and Conner comprise the liaison committee.

Philip W. Huck was elected president of the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department at its annual meeting in the Takoma fire house. Huck previously had served several terms as treasurer of the department.

Ralph Harries was elected vice president, Henry E. Marschalk, financial secretary; Hardin C. Waters, recording secretary; Norman C. Jones, treasurer; Dewey Hayes, chief; Stephen J. LaScola and Edward W. Lee, assistant chiefs; William Flagg and E. W. Schmidt, captains; R. P. Roseman, sergeant at arms, and Judge Herman C. Heffner, David Abercrombie, J. Wilson Dodd, Joseph L. Martin and Martin F. Iverson, members of the board of trustees.

The directors of the Montgomery County Farm Bureau and the Farm Bureau Supply Company will meet today in joint session to formulate plans for the annual meeting of the Farm Bureau to be held in January, it was announced yesterday by J. W. Jones, president of both organizations. The meeting hour has been advanced to 9:30 A. M.

William F. Prettyman, Rockville, was elected president of the Rockville Volunteer Fire Department at the annual membership meeting held last night in the Fire Department Building.

Mrs. Anna Bell Wyatt, a resident of Montgomery County, filed suit for an absolute divorce from Henry W. Wyatt, in the Circuit Court for Montgomery County at Rockville, Md., yesterday.

Mrs. Ralph Mahr was elected president of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Takoma Park Lutheran Church to succeed Mrs. Chester R. Brenneman at a meeting held Wednesday night at the church, Fifth and Dahlia streets. Other officers elected are Mrs. Earl Potter, vice president; Mrs. Wayne Potter, secretary, and Miss Elizabeth Stuermann, treasurer.

Gross postal receipts for 1935 at the Silver Spring (Md.) post office totaled $45,384.87, it was announced yesterday by Postmaster Howard W. Griffith. This gives the office a first-class rating, effective July 1. In 1934 the postal receipts were $33,665.88.

Woodside Parent-Teacher Association, Woodside, Md., has adopted a resolution urging the Board of Montgomery County Commissioners to rope off certain streets in the community when there is snow on the ground so that the children may sled in safety. Correction of defects in the heating system is asked in another resolution addressed to the custodian of school property. The resolution states that the school had to be closed recently for several days because the present system is unable to furnish sufficient heat.

Memorial Rites For Arlington's Firemen Slated

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

The annual memorial services of the Arlington County Firemen's Association will be held at the Calvary Methodist Protestant Church, at Aurora Hills, at 2 p. m. Sunday.

All firemen, ladies' auxiliaries, members, pastors of local churches, families of deceased firemen and the general public are invited.

Members for whom services are being held are Eugene Turnburks, veteran of the Cherrydale Fire Department; F. E. Mann, of the Cherrydale Fire Department, and Jack Davis, of the Falls Church Fire Department.

Albert M. Jones, of the Jefferson Fire Department, is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements.

Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas reports that all but six deeds and proceedings to condemn two pieces of property for rights-of-way for the completion of the Lee boulevard from Lyon Park to the Arlington Memorial Bridge have been completed. He says that he expects to start condemnation proceedings at an early date.

Indications are that the State highway department will advertise for bids for the completion of the boulevard within the next 60 days.

Wanted in Atlanta on a charge of robbery, Robert Anderson, 25, colored, was arrested yesterday in South Washington, Va., where he was working in a pipe factory, by Deputy Sheriff Harry L. Woodyard and Policeman Hugh Jones.

Anderson was taken to the Arlington County Jail, where he is being held for Atlanta officers.

Eugene Fitzpatrick, 20, and Harry King, 21, both of the 100 block E street southeast, Washington, charged with assault and robbery, were held for the action of the grand jury yesterday by County Judge B. M. Hedrick.

According to police, the two men hired Joseph Barry, taxicab driver, to drive them into Virginia. At a point on Glebe road they blindfolded Barry and took $2.70 from his pocket.

Welfare Official Tells Club Women of Fairfax Basic Statutes Exist.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Alexandria 43-F-31.

James Phillips, of the Virginia Department of Welfare, was the principal speaker at the January meeting of the Fairfax County Business and Professional Women's Club in the Parish Hall at Fairfax, Va.

He said Virginia is already supplied with social security laws and all that is necessary is enabling legislation to make these laws effective. He pointed out that although the Virginia penal system is one of the best in the country the greatest present need is for an extension of the women's industrial farm, construction of a separate unit for colored women and the development of a system of paroles and indeterminate sentences.

Mrs. Clara Byars, of Fairfax County, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics, outlined the proposed social security legislation to be introduced during the present session of the State Assembly.

State Sentor John W. Rust and Delegate John C. Mackall, of Fairfax County, were urged to support the following measures in the State Assembly which were indorsed by the club: Legislation fixing the maximum hours of labor for women, the national child labor amendment, unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, two bills for the education department, a minimum wage for teachers and teachers' pensions.

Stockholders of the Vienna Trust Co. at their annual meeting yesterday reduced the number of directors from 11 to 10, following a report from President W. R. Gray and Secretary-Treasurer Norman Cobb showing the bank has had one of the most successful years since its organization.

Directors elected were W. R. Gray, Joseph Berry, John W. Hurst, James N. Kincmhoelos, Hugh W. Gunnell, Franklin Williams, Oswald V. Carper, Charles E. Miller, Sidney N. Jones and Robert R. Buckley. These directors meeting later relected W. R. Gray as president, Joseph Berry and Senator John Rust, vice presidents; Norman Cobb, secretary-treasurer, and Elmer E. Cockrill, assistant secretary.

Mrs. Ralph Sherman, of McLean, deputy State councillor, last night installed the new officers of Kenmore Council, Daughters of America, of Andrew Chapel. Mrs. Alphenus Burgess is the new councilor; Alpheus Burgess, associate councilor; Mrs. John Barry, vice councilor; Walter Wyncoop, associate vice councilor. Other officers are: Warden, Charles S. Sanders; inside sentinal, Miss Eva Mills; outside sentinel, Mrs. Irene Caton; conductor, Mrs. Viola Money; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Lawrence Leigh; 18-month trustee, Ralph Thompson; reuresentatives to the State council, Mrs. Francis Lanham, Mrs. Viola Money and Mrs. Lorraine Jenkins; alternates, Alpheus Burgess, Mrs. Lou Burgess and Miss Emma Millard. Officers whose terms do not expire until July 1 are Mrs. J. W. Day, recording secretary; Mrs. Lorraine Jenkins, financial secretary, and Mrs. Robert Canton, treasurer.

Prince Georges Group to Probe Phone Service

Citizens Association Also Plans to Investigate Electric Rates.

Branding telephone service in their section "inadequate," the Southern Prince Georges County Citizens' Association, meeting at Surrattsville High School, Clinton, Md., Wednesday night, appointed a special committee to investigate. Henry Copely, of Silver Hill, Md., was named chairman.

The association also vigorously assailed allegedly excessive electric rates. Another committee was appointed to make an investigation of them.

At the same time, the organization again brought up the previously discussed question of inadequate service along the southern Maryland pike. Plans were made to carry the matter before the Public Utilities Commission in Baltimore.

The citizens previously complained that the rapidly growing communities along the pike have not been supplied with proper bus service. Only interstate buses pass there now, they said.

Bringing up the alleged scarcity of policemen in the lower section of the county, the association voted the appointment of a committee to investigate. Hugh Bickford, William Lovelace and George Sellner were named.

A resolution was also written in the minutes approving the proposed Potomac River bridge from Morgantown to the Virginia shore.

Damage suits totaling $65,000 were filed jointly in the circuit court here yesterday against Mrs. Eleanor M. Patterson, publisher of the Washington Herald; Mr. and Mrs. Augustine V. Cullen, 1301 Massachusetts avenue northwest, and Cullen, Inc., 1315 H street northwest.

The suits were an outgrowth of an accident on the Marlboro pike near Forestville, Md., last August 4, involving two autos and a truck.

Filing the suits were Mrs. Grace Brinsfield, 906 Savannah place southeast, who asked recovery of $25,000 damages; her husband, William J. Brinsfield, who asked $10,000; Mrs. Bernice McCann, 339 Kentucky avenue southeast, $25,000; her husband, Francis McCann, $10,000.

The complainants said they were driving to Washington in an auto owned by Mr. Brinsfield when they were struck by the Cullen machine, which had, in turn, been in a collision with a truck owned by Mrs. Patterson's estate, Dower House, near Upper Marlboro.

They were represented by Lansdale G. Sasscer, president of the Maryland Senate.

Election of officers for the Young Men's Democratic Club of Prince Georges will be held next Thursday at St. Michael's Hall, Ardmore, Md. The club will be the guest of the Twentieth District Democratic Club.

Those who will be named for offices by the nominating committee will be H. Winship Wheatley, jr., of Hyattsville, for re-election as president; R. Nelson Snouffer, jr., of College Heights, for first vice president; Louis Kutsch, Lanham, for second vice president; W. Waverly Webb, Hyattsville, for re-election as secretary, and J. Robert Sherwood, Mount Rainier, for re-election for treasurer.

Not The Time For New Taxes.

The District Commissioners are well advised to delay the submission of a tax program to Congress. Enactment of new levies at this time would doubtless result in the accumulation of a larger surplus, encouraging further reduction of the Federal contribution to District revenue. If the Budget Bureau is permitted to deny the people of Washington municipal service that is considered indispensable in other cities, the imposition of new taxes would only add insult to injury.

Vigorous opposition on the part of Washington residents killed the Mapes tax bills several years ago. That opposition was not directed at these particular measures so much as at the purpose for which the House sought to use them. To a large number of representatives higher taxes in Washington afford an opportunity further to reduce the Government's share of the cost of maintaining the National Capital. If new levies should be proposed while the District has a prospective surplus of several million dollars, there would be a terrific struggle in the House to turn the new revenue into the Federal Treasury.

Unquestionably the local tax system needs revision to ease the burden upon real estate. But it should by no means be adjusted to relieve Congress of its obligation to finance the national functions of the local government. Until some fair and equitable means of determining the extent of that obligation can be devised, tax revision will be a risky undertaking from the District's point of view. There is nothing to indicate that the Commissioners have lost their enthusiasm for a modification of revenue measures, but events have stressed the desirability of beginning at the bottom to build a sound fiscal structure.

Abandonment of the proposed tax bills should bring, therefore, renewal of the fight to secure adoption of some equitable formula allocating to the District and Federal governments their respective shares of the cost of maintaining the Capital City. Combined with the restoration of local budget-making powers to the Commissioners, this is by far the most important local issue awaiting Congressional solution.

The Prospective Deficit.

It is rumored that President Roosevelt will later ask Congress to appropriate $1,500,000,000 to be expended by the WPA during the fiscal year 1937. This sum would be in addition to the recovery and relief outlays financed from the unexpended emergency balances appropriated for the current year.

Exclusive of these new relief funds, as the President stated in his budget message, the deficit for the coming fiscal year would reach an estimated $1,098,000,000. He then explained that "by whatever amount the appropriation for work relief at this session is less than $2,136,000,000, the gross deficit for 1937 will be less than the deficit for 1936 by the same amount."

Since the estimated deficit for the current year has been placed at $3,234,000,000, this conclusion can be verified by simple subtraction. But, unfortunately, it failed to make allowance for various contingencies that are likely to swell the deficit considerably in the months ahead.

The elimination of processing taxes, expected to yield $547,000,000 during the next fiscal year, could be ignored if the demise of the AAA spelled the end of farm relief. But it is highly probable that Congress will vote substantial sums not only to cover obligations already incurred but to provide subsidies for agriculture during the coming year. Then cash payment of the bonus would add from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 to Government outlays. So even if the President's highly optimistic estimates of returns from income and internal revenue taxes are not discounted, the deficit may easily rise several billions of dollars.

Part of this possible increase in uncovered outlays would doubtless swell the deficit for the current year, but a large proportion of it would be added to the 1937 deficit. If all such unbudgeted items should be allocated to the next fiscal year, the 1937 deficit would rise to a figure well above $4,000,000,000, unless Congress votes new taxes to replace the processing levies.

The outlook certainly is far from reassuring and it is clear that the overthrow of the AAA calls for rough revision of the soothing assurances in the recent budget message. The undesirability of any new bonus legislation is emphasized, as is the probability that new sources of revenue must be found if the deficit is not to increase rather than decrease in magnitude.

The Office Of President.

"Comparisons are odious," according to a saying which has stood the test of time, and not a few who listened in on the President's Jackson Day speech may have concluded that the proverb will apply to the thinly-veiled parallelism drawn between "Old Hickory" and the present incumbent of the White House.

Such comparisons are generally better left to the discretion of impartial biographers, who in making them will observe Mr. Roosevelt's excellent exhortation to obtain all the facts before drawing conclusions. And one incidental fact, which the President forgot to mention on Wednesday night, is that Andrew Jackson was responsible for the policy still known as the spoils system. "To the victors belong the spoils!" No wonder Mr. Farley applauded happily when the President emphasized that "history repeats."

Of course freedom with evidence, inadmissible for a President in a message to Congress on the state of the Union, is permissible and is to be expected from a party leader at a frankly partisan rally. Only those who take at face value Mr. Roosevelt's "specific recommendation" to spread the facts abroad will trouble to remind him that Andrew Jackson won much of his popular support by rigid economy, by opposition to centralization of government, and by completely paying off the national debt in 1835. Yet, as the President told the microphones over the heads of those who had paid $50 apiece for their dinners, "luxurious propaganda"—even when winningly presented through "the great media for the dissemination of information"—will not indefinitely fool a people who have a good deal of critical faculty and training in the essentials of self-government.

More debatable than historical license, in a speech which the President defined as applicable to "every citizen in the country," regardless of political affiliation, was its obvious attempt to raise an issue alternative to those for which solution is not being achieved. This substitute issue was drawn between "the people of the United States" and the elements of "musty reaction," "hollow traditionalism" and "haughty intellectualism," from which last category brain trusters, past and present, are presumably excluded. The problems which face the United States are many and serious. And every one of them can only be rendered more critical by any demagogic attempt, from any quarter, to surround them with an atmosphere of civil strife.

Mr. Roosevelt was well-advised to attempt no "offhand judgment" on the policy to be pursued in consequence of the recent momentous Supreme Court decision. And it was entirely proper and stimulating for him to announce that the Administration "will not retreat." In spite of somewhat exaggerated emphasis on "forces of privilege and greed" the almost universal desire is to salvage all that holds real constructive promise in the New Deal and to build it into the permanent structure of the Nation. In this effort there should be and must be no surrender.

Retreat, if not rout, however, will be the probable outcome unless truly co-operative action is employed to solve problems of great delicacy and complexity. Progress is jeopardized, not aided, by attempts to substitute passion for painstaking thought; emotionalism for reason; class warfare and propagandized strife for intelligent, deliberate, patient and tolerant leadership. Whatever tactics others may follow, only constructive policy—certainly at this critical time—is admissible for the supreme office of President of the United States.

Our Housing Shortage.

Washington's housing shortage has aroused a great deal of concern on Capitol Hill. Mrs. Norton's threat of Congressional intervention unless rents are cut is only one of numerous statements intended to bring official pressure to bear upon local landlords. It is apparent, however, that mere talk will not correct the situation.

The need for more residential building in the District and its suburbs has been apparent for at least two years. In recent months home construction has greatly increased, but accommodations so far provided fall far short of meeting the pressing demands of a rapidly growing city. With a large number of Federal agencies directly or indirectly engaged in stimulating home construction, the continued shortage of suitable living quarters becomes a challenge to the Administration's housing program. Whatever the reason, the FHA has failed to bring about that degree of cooperation among bankers and builders necessary to relieve congestion.

As chairman of the House District Committee, Mrs. Norton plans to give the public an opportunity to present complaints about the rent situation, and then to call in realtors and bankers to inquire what they intend to do about it. This procedure might be made more effective by bringing the FHA and other Government housing agencies into the picture. Some form of cooperative endeavor to supply adequate housing is clearly desirable. And it is a responsibility of governmental agencies to encourage and aid such unity of effort between the banks and the building industry. No merely negative action on the part of Congress will supply apartments to families now inadequately housed. Indeed, drastic penalties or arbitrary rules applied by Congress might delay elimination of the housing shortage.

Regardless of what method of dealing with the problem is adopted, it also should be related to current developments. Many employes of the AAA may soon be leaving Washington as a result of the Supreme Court's recent decision. Likewise the NRA is being demobilized. Overbuilding to supply a demand that may well be on the decline would be just as unfortunate as the present shortage. What seems to be needed is a moderate program of expansion and an effective agreement on the part of real estate operators to eliminate all exorbitant rents while the supply of living quarters is catching up with the demand.

After The AAA.

Because of drought, superimposed on the restriction policies of the AAA, abnormally large surpluses of basic farm products have for the most part disappeared. Prices of agricultural commodities have risen as excess stocks have declined and as business conditions both at home and abroad have improved. Thus the downfall of the AAA has come at a time when abolition of governmental production control and price fixing will call for a minimum amount of painful readjustment.

Evidence to that effect is furnished by the relatively slight market disturbances which have followed announcement of the Supreme Court decision. Subsequent price declines are chiefly accounted for by the invalidation of the processing taxes, which affect prices paid to farmers for processed commodities as well as those charged consumers. The prevalent nervousness in the cotton market is caused chiefly by the existence of large stocks of cotton acquired by the Government under its crop-loan plan.

There is certainly no evidence of an agricultural crisis, at present or in immediate prospect, that requires hurried action to replace the AAA with any similar paternalistic system of farm relief. Instead of plunging hectically into discussion of various price-fixing or subsidizing devices designed to benefit the farmer, Congress should at least pause to consider whether any substitute of such character is necessary. The farm problem is to a large extent a matter of providing for the orderly sale of agricultural products and for withholding of surpluses which, if hurriedly pressed upon the market, will cause a price collapse.

The remedy for this situation does not lie in Government price fixing accompanied by the impounding of surplus stocks held at artificially high levels. The disastrous experiences of the Federal Farm Board showed that the existence of such governmentally controlled surpluses has a very depressing and disturbing influence upon prices. The complete failure of the efforts of the board to "stabilize" cotton and wheat prices, however, has not prevented the Commodity Credit Corporation from following in its footsteps. There has been resort to cotton loans designed to put a high price on cotton, compared to the world market price, even in terms of devalued dollars.

Instead of making the Government an agent for raising prices by direct subsidies, or subsidies disguised as loans, the country banks, livestock associations and farmers' co-operatives should be encouraged, and if necessary assisted, to handle farm surpluses through regular channels. The agricultural credit facilities provided by the Government through the various branches of the Farm Credit Administration make it possible today to furnish abundant credit to farmers for all legitimate purposes and to enable them to market their products in an orderly fashion.

Production control, leading inevitably to political pressure for price fixing, has created many more problems for the American farmer than it has solved. Congress might well consider, therefore, whether the time has not come for testing the ability of the farm population to look out for itself, with the support of the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, where needed.

Once it was believed that the surest and best way to get rid of embarrassing surplus stocks and to mitigate price fluctuations lay in encouraging distributor purchases for delayed sales. Given intelligent handling of these surpluses, and adequate credit, the farmer can in the long run probably protect himself against market hazards more effectively than under any system of governmental price fixation or production control.

Mussolini says destiny is pushing him along. Yeah; it pushed Napoleon to the summit, and then gave him a kick in the pants.

Mrs. Borah says she thinks it would be awful to be the wife of the President and have to live in the White House. How old-fashioned!

Philippine Future.

From the New Orleans Times-Picayune

Since the return of the Americans who attended the Philippine Commonwealth's inaugural at Manila, this country has been deluged with interviews and articles on the future of the Philippines.

We do not know, of course, but our guess is that the views of the returning Americans reflect the various brands of propaganda which "contacted" them in Manila and its environs. Native officials frankly desire modification of the independence act to avert the economic hazards they accepted as the price of eventual independence. Philippine business interests probably desire, in addition to that, restoration of the American protectorate. The menace of imperialistic Japan lends support to either program. But there are a lot of Americans who did not go to Manila for the inaugural. These home-staying folk may conclude that the Filipinos should have time and opportunity to prove their own capacity for self-government and mastery of their own economic fate before any change in the Washington contract with their commonwealth is considered.

The Love Of Money.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of January 8, there is a brief news item entitled: "Morgan Corrects Lamont on Bible." The fact is both Lamont and Morgan are inaccurate in quoting I Timothy 2:10.

Mr. Lamont, before the Munitions Committee hearing, declared: "The Bible says that money is the root of all evil." Mr. Morgan interposed by affirming: "It does not, it says the love of money is the root of all evil."

The original Greek text of the passage, however, reads: "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." This is the rendering of the revised version and is correct. It is not true to say that the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil, for evil has many other roots besides the love of money.

The Birth Controllers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: By all means let us be realistic in discussing such a nasty subject as birth control. The name is deceptive. What is really being advocated by short-sighted people is race suicide. The vital question is whether this Nation shall live or die.

As might be expected, self-appointed birth controllers (who claim to know more about the problems of the poor than the poor themselves) are putting the cart before the horse. If they love the poor so much, why don't they exert a little constructive effort to reform our economic and social structure in such a way as to make it possible for people to have children and to rear them in keeping with their needs?

Birth controllers have demonstrated an utter lack of understanding for things moral and an abysmal ignorance of the terrible social and economic consequences of their folly. The population in the United States is no longer reproducing itself. We are rapidly becoming a Nation of old people. Fewer children means a constriction of the market for all commodities. It means increased unemployment and a return to the licentious decadence of the ancient Roman Empire.

For these reasons I am opposed to race suicide and to all other un-American efforts to undermine our national well-being.

Readers' Approval.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the mother of a baby and as an American citizen, I can not too heartily commend your policy to let the Lindberghs alone.

If some prominent Washington woman would write letters to all of the women's, mothers' and teachers' organizations in the country about your stand, I am sure that they would overwhelmingly endorse it and commend you for it. This would give honor where honor is due and promote common decency in this country.

MARY McDOUGAL AXELSON.
New York City, Jan. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your attitude toward the personal affairs of the Lindbergh family is most commendable. May I suggest a further step? A mere statement of the execution of Hauptmann is all the notice that it deserves. No photographs, no resume of all the facts in the case and no lurid details of his last moments on earth. Of course, a bona fide confession should receive due attention.

F. T. COOK.
Washington, Jan. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Three hearty cheers for a newspaper that has the courage to make such a resolution as you have in regard to the personal affairs of Charles A. Lindbergh.

GERTRUDE J. BROWN.
South Bend, Ind., Jan. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am sure that I am one of millions of ordinary everyday American men and women who rejoiced with an exceeding joy when they saw The Post's stand on the Lindberghs.

I know nothing of your paper or its policies, or whether it is pink, red or yellow, but if it serves no other purpose than to lead in a reform of this most viciously objectionable form of American journalism, I would vote it a very special prize for a piece of work that has long cried out for a champion.

Please accept my congratulations and may your example pave the way for the return of the Lindberghs to their native land, to live in peace and privacy as to their personal affairs.

Germs Over The Counter.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was interested in your editorial entitled "Dollars Against Death" which appeared in The Post of January 7. I would like to suggest that while they are demolishing germ-breeding hovels, they would also do something to stop the wholesale distribution of various kinds of germs by our city restaurants and drugstore counters. What is the matter with the health inspection service in Washington? Never in all my wanderings have I witnessed such unsanitary conditions as exist in the majority of drugstore lunch counters where hundreds of Washington people partake of food each day.

It isn't surprising that the mortality rate from tuberculosis is so high in Washington. People live so much indoors, get very little or no sunshine during the winter months. This makes them all the more susceptible to colds and their resistance is so lowered that when goodly portions of tubercular germs are handed out to them over drugstore counters with their sandwiches and coffee at regular intervals they are ready victims.

I wish to commend you on your stand about the Lindberghs.

Comment On The AAA Decision

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With due respect to the Supreme Court, it will have a tough time living down the statement that "agriculture is a purely local activity." After so much profound and ponderous thought—such a decision is akin to an elephant giving birth to a mouse.

The framers of the Constitution were undoubtedly a band of men with unusual foresight, wisdom and understanding—but unfortunately this cannot be said for all those who are given the responsibility of interpreting their words.

The test of all great men is the simplicity with which they clarify their position—and I consider the minority opinion to be a clear tribute to the men who framed it. One of your good writers once said that the minority opinion was more often proved to be the right one—I am beginning to understand the possibilities of that position.

MIDWESTERNER.
Takoma Park, Md., Jan. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The news that the AAA has at last been declared unconstitutional comes as the end of a nightmare. Let us all rejoice that finis has been written to this act that any ordinary man knew to be contrary to the spirit and meaning of the Constitution!

Were I asked to plan something for the benefit of the farmer I would probably think of a lot of foolish schemes, but never one as crazy as to pay a man for not doing something. That is entirely too easy and enticing—also too hard on the pocketbook of the rest of the Nation—to be of any lasting benefit, and I seriously doubt if any future thinking and real dirt farmer had any say in framing this defunct legislation.

One thing I can say without fear of contradiction, and that is: there were few if any farmers during these long years of depression that did not have plenty to eat and wear, whereas I saw with my own eyes children in the cities picking around in garbage cans for scraps to eat. Furthermore a man with a full stomach is not a fit subject for communism. I am not denying the farmers needed some sort of help, but in forming a plan toward this end, let us do it so that the farmer must use a certain amount of his own energy and resource to achieve his own uplifting.

It is very disheartening for many taxpayers and voters at last to come to the realization that we have Congressmen and Senators in Washington drawing big salaries, passing unconstitutional legislation, and in-between times trying to fill us full of political "applesauce."

The time has come when it is going to take more than a good personality and an engaging smile to operate in Washington as the people's representative. Remember the 1932 Democratic platform, also the 1932 campaign promises.

Chaptico, Md., Jan. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on the AAA comes as no surprise to anyone who has had an opportunity to measure the mental caliber of the majority making up the membership of Congress within the past few years. Without doubt, the ability of the membership has decreased year by year and is now about as low as it is possible for it to be.

Without going into the legal aspects of the question, there is no question in my mind that the AAA has played right into the hands of the middleman, speculator and those of their stripe. It has not been the farmer who has profited by the AAA; it has been the middleman and speculator. The consuming public has been the one to pay whatever prices these have exacted. The last few years have been great ones for the speculator, the middleman and the commissionman. Thanks to the Supreme Court, their license to exact whatever they wished has been taken away.

Let us stand back of the Supreme Court. It has demonstrated itself to be our best bulwark.

The Post Impressionist

Pre-Pickford Pictures.

Post Office, Friday.

IN a New York theater the other evening— while Washingtonians were jumping at the machine-gun rattle of "Show Them No Mercy," or listening to the perfectly recorded voice of Lily Pons in "I Dream Too Much"—a super-sophisticated audience (perhaps we should call it "a group of spectators") applauded six silent motion-pictures.

They were: "The Execution of Mary Queen of Scots" and "Wash-Day Troubles," 50-foot reels. "A Trip to the Moon" and "The Great Train-Robbery," 800 feet long. A sketchy version of "Faust"—Goethe's drama, of course; not the opera of Gounod. And a "Queen Elizabeth" with Sarah Bernhardt for its star.

A lone piano provided the music. The strains of "Everybody Works But Father" enhanced the hilarity of the wash-day farce. The tenderer scenes of the hold-up melodrama flickered along to the tune of "After the Ball"—an anachronism, by the way, since that beautiful ballad preceded Porter's train-robbery by at least ten years.

Nevertheless, the program was a success. It is already touring the country.

For it is sponsored by the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art, about which this Column told you some while since. The half-dozen features have been gathered together—for colleges and other study groups—to illustrate the movies' development of narrative from its beginnings in the first Chicago World's Fair era up to 1911.

The Queen of Scots picture first saw the light—and enlightened spectators—in 1894.

Do you know what was the cradle of the movies? It was a little one-room shack under the wing of Thomas Edison's laboratories at West Orange N. J.—used by Edison to try-out "subjects" for his kinetoscope. Why it was called what it was called the Post-Impressionist can't guess. "The Black Maria" was a facetious term for the police-patrol wagon. Anyhow, that shack was also called "The Black Maria," and in this, the first American motion - picture studio, "The Execution of Mary, Queen of Scots" was made.

It had been a peep-show. Jean Le Roy, film pioneer, projected it upon a screen.

"Wash-day Troubles" came next: two years later. It was a long advance—mechanically: a one-episode "comic." Its children and grandchildren grew up to be the whole Slapstick Family.

By 1902 Georges Melies—of France and of French Jules Verne's brilliance—was ready to put on a ten-minute story, with elaborate scenery, trick camera-effects. So put it on he did, bringing to the screen all the arsenal of the professional magician and stage-illusionist: "A Trip to the Moon."

Meanwhile, Edwin S. Porter, "cameraman" for the Edison people, was at work upon something still more ambitious. He produced it, as "The Great Train Robbery," in 1903.

The motion-picture industry calls Porter's piece "the first American motion picture with a plot." That's true—as far as it goes. But, really, the picture is still going. If "Wash-day Troubles" bore the slapstick brood, "The Great Train Robbery" was the ancestor of last night's G-men film. Moreover, in its curly-haired darling who unbinds the desperadoes' victim, you have an early—

Yes, the earliest Shirley Temple!

Then "Faust" followed—from the Pathe people. Its place was insured by its introduction of the soon conventional device for recording the thoughts of a screen character. When Marguerite recalled her earliest meeting with Faust, the picture of that meeting was faintly photographed on the wall behind the unhappy heroine.

"Of course, it is not to be supposed that Madame would appear on the screen?"

The great Sarah delighted them by declaring that it was indeed to be supposed:

"Why, this," said she, "is my opportunity for earthly immortality!"

So they made her "Queen Elizabeth." Louis Mercanton was the producer. He was also the director—if anybody can properly be said to have ever directed Bernhardt anywhere.

The result was more a photographed play than a motion-picture drama. But Adolph Zukor knew that nothing in which this actress appeared could be a failure over here. In 1912, he brought the four reels to America as the starting-point of the "Famous Plays With Famous Players" organization—the Paramount of today.

Thus was the vogue of the long-feature film established in these United States.

You see: The Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art has assembled (that's the pat word, isn't it?) a program which more than achieves its mission. We never before quite realized how long a past the young motion-picture industry possesses.

Fair Enough

Gun Maker Benet.

Paris, Jan. 9.

THE grand old man of the American colony in Paris is Laurence Vincent Benet, the manufacturer of machine guns, who has been in the machine gun business here for 50 years. He was born at West Point, N. Y., 72 years ago, received his education at Yale, emerging in 1884, and came to France the next year to join the Societe Hotchkiss et Compagnie which produces the Hotchkiss guns.

He is covered with honors bestowed by various nations, including the Military Order of Christ, a Portuguese distinction, and all of the French decorations, with the single exception of the Order of Barflies, which is not really French, anyway, but Scotch, with headquarters at Harry's New York Bar, in the Rue Daunou. Mr. Benet is believed to be the only American in France who is not a member of the Order of Barflies, and this is a distinction in itself.

In 1898 Mr. Benet interrupted his residence in France to serve briefly as an ensign in the United States Navy in the War with Spain, but he did not desist from his life work of manufacturing machine guns even then. He served with the American ambulance and hospital services in the war to end war, succoring among others many soldiers who had been shot by machine guns manufactured by his business rivals. This service ended in August, 1917, and from September of that year until January, 1918, he gave unstintingly of himself in the cause of God and democracy as a member of the advisory committee of the Purchasing Board of the A. E. F., which used many Hotchkiss machine guns.

MR. BENET wears white whiskers which impart a benevolent appearance entirely consistent with his generous and humane nature. He is always interested in the affairs of his native land. He went home for a visit a couple of years ago and on his return uttered some profound opinions of the state of affairs in America.

The American press of Paris always treats Mr. Benet with the deference, not to say veneration, due a man who has manufactured more machine guns than any other single individual, and it was reported that the grand old man of the American colony in Paris delivered his views with a "slow smile."

"The working class in the United States are showing a fine spirit," Mr. Benet said that day, "and are turning a deaf ear to communist propaganda which comes from only the small foreign element in America."

From this it will be seen that although Mr Benet has found it preferable to live abroad for fifty years, his heart still beats true for the red, white and blue and the home of the brave and free.

IT is not all a mere matter of making hand-across-the-sea speeches to Chambers of Commerce and accepting decorations from grateful governments, this business of manufacturing better machine guns and more of them. It takes constant research and invention and constant hustling in a highly competitive commercial market to keep factory chimneys hot and the working class employes of the Hotchkiss Co. out of the ranks of the unemployed.

The ideal way to score Mr. Benet's success in life would be to record the number of men of various nationalities who have been killed, blinded or crippled by his machine guns in five decades of his conscientious endeavor, but such figures, unfortunately, are not to be had.

The next best index then would be the reckoning of the profits, and there is a clue to Mr. Benet's ability in the French book on the munitions industry which states that his net profits in 1931 were more than twenty million francs, or about $1,320,000, on an amortized capital of only sixteen million francs.

* * * *

MR. BENET'S fine public spirit and his works of humanity are synonymous with his very name. He is a grand officer of the Legion of Honor, a member of the board of the American Chamber of Commerce in France, an officer of Osmania, which is a Turkish distinction, a commander of the Crown of Rumania and a member of the Anglo Ordinance Association, the Army and Navy Club of Washington, the local Legion, the American Legion, the American Geographical Association, the United States Naval Institute and the Yale Engineering Association.

Mrs. Benet is interested in the Colonial Union for Wounded Men and holds a medal of reconnaisance of the Duchess of Vendome. The machine gun firm was founded in France in 1867 by Benjamin Beakley Hotchkiss, a native of Sharon, Conn., who found himself without a market when our own Civil War closed.

The War of 1870 gave Mr. Hotchkiss his real start in France with a factory devoted to the production of cartridges. He died in 1885, the year that young Mr. Benet arrived to start his long and valuable career in the service of his fellow men. The climax occurred on his fiftieth anniversary in business, when in a touching ceremony the employes of the machine gun factory presented to the grand old man of the American colony a life-sized portrait of himself.

A Neutrality Pitfall

Pending Legislation Is Not Drawn To Envisage A Russo-Japanese War And Other Conflicts Differing From Present Crisis.

By Livingston Hartley.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

THE Pittman-McReynolds neutrality bill introduced into Congress on January 3, represents a revolutionary advance when compared with our Government's attitude toward neutrality in August, 1914. Nevertheless, in its treatment of the problem of American commercial assistance to belligerents, the primary cause of our involvement in the World War in 1917, it contains a serious weakness from the angle of our larger national interests. It is essential that the public should appreciate this weakness now, before the bill is finally adopted by Congress.

Our principal neutrality aims may be regarded as three: first, to keep ourselves out of war; second, to protect the larger interests of our foreign policy while neutral; third, to safeguard our foreign trade.

The present bill achieves the third of these aims at the cost of compromising the second and indirectly prejudicing the first. As long as restrictions on commercial assistance to belligerents are limited to trade in excess of normal quotas, our foreign trade will not be injured by our new neutrality policy. A very real danger that drastic embargoes on key products to two belligrents might have to be enforced against 40 or 50 nations, as a result of the suden extension of a limited war, has been avoided by the current neutrality bill. This danger of economic disaster is averted and our foreign commerce protected by the adoption of a weak policy towards restrictions on trade with belligerents.

One of our pricipal interests in foreign policy is the maintenance of peace abroad, as the Kellogg Pact, various other treaties and frequent statements by Presidents and Secretaries of State during the last fifteen years attest. Our Government has also adopted in the last three months a new policy, corollary to the preservation of neutrality during foreign wars. This is abstention from activities which would tend directly to prolong war abroad, since the longer a foreign war endures, the more likely it is to enlarge its field and involve the United States. There is reason to believe that the present neutrality bill will compromise both of these policies, as can best be seen by a consideration of cases.

IN THE war between Italy and Ethiopia, 50 nations are engaged in a collective economic effort to achieve an honorable peace. These 50 nations will consider the enforcement of further embargoes on exports to Italy of essential war materials, such as oil, steel and copper, on January 20.

The shipment of American supplies of these materials is already aiding Italian efforts to proceed with the conquest of Ethiopia. If 50 other nations should place additional embargoes upon their export to Italy, the continuation of normal American shipments will still aid Italy to prolong the war.

This question has other ramifications. As a direct result of the normal peacetime flow of war materials, which the present neutrality bill would allow our exporters to send to Italy, the 50 nations now enforcing sanctions may find arguments for refusing to extend to these materials the export embargoes they have already adopted. In that case, the war in Africa will undoubtedly last longer, and some of the blame for its continuance will fall upon the United States.

MOREOVER, the possibility still exists that the failure of collective economic action to restrain Italy, due directly or indirectly to the normal amount of essential war materials still obtainable from the United States, will lead to the institution of a naval blockade. In that event, we should face a big war in Europe instead of a little war in Africa, and our normal exports to Italy would become subject to interception by British and French cruisers. The results would be friction over our neutral commerce with the belligerents, creating many of the same problems we tried to solve the last time neutrality failed.

Independent action towards foreign war has proved a wise course in the last few months and may prove wise in the future. We must recognize, however, that if we prejudice the collective economic efforts of other nations to stop foreign wars we shall push these other nations towards the adoption of measures of armed force.

The weakness inherent in the trade restriction policy provided for in the new neutrality bill is particularly apparent in relation to the Far East. Many qualified observers now believe that the present course of Japanese expansion will end in a Russo-Japanese war in the next few years. In such event, our attitude towards our exports to Japan would constitute an important factor in the struggle, since Japan buys over one-quarter of her total imports from the United States. The continued shipment of normal American exports of war materials to Japan during a Russo-Japanese war could not fail to be a direct and vital aid to Japanese expansion into Asia.

THERE is also another possibility in the Far East. If the League of Nations is successful in defeating the Italian attempt to conquer Ethiopia, the League machinery for peace preservation may prove able to function in Eastern Asia. Suppose then that a future Japanese attack on China or Russia should lead to the imposition of economic sanctions by the League against Japan. If we should continue, in such a case, to supply Japan with more than a quarter of her normal imports, we would be acting directly against every one of our national interests relating to peace, China or the Pacific.

Once the new neutrality bill is adopted, the enforcement of more drastic embargoes on essential war materials in such a case, or in the later stages of the present war, would require new legislation by Congress. Before this bill is passed, therefore, before it is too late, it is of the utmost importance to seek such changes as will provide, both now and in the future, adequate protection for both our principal interests and our foreign trade.

Total restriction of essential war material exports to belligerents is subject to one danger. A limited war between two nations might develop into an extensive conflict involving all Europe and 60 per cent of our exports. Such a contingency must be provided for in advance, since an automatic extension of drastic embargoes on so large a proportion of our exports of many key materials would prove disastrous to our foreign commerce.

* * * *

PROVISION for this contingency already exists in two places the new neutrality bill. The President may, "modify or revoke in whole or in part any proclamation issued by him," under Section 3, "when he shall find that the conditions which caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist or have so changed as to justify in his opinion such modification or revocation."

This provision would apply if a limited war, in which we had put into force drastic embargoes against exports of essential war materials to the belligerents, should suddenly be extended.

The bill provides further that all restrictions relating to finance or to shipments of arms or essential war materials to the belligerents "shall apply equally to all belligerents, unless the Congress, with the approval of the President, shall declare otherwise." This provision creates a path of escape from any impossible political or economic situation in which the enforcement of the neutrality bill might place the United States.

In view of these two existing provisions, there would seem no good reason why Congress should not provide the President with authority to enforce more drastic embargoes on exports to belligerents of essential war materials. Such authority to carry out a strong trade restriction policy may prove to be an indispensable element in the proper protection of our principal national interests during war abroad.

Don't Mention It.

The Three Inquisitors.

SOMEONE has called the Senate committee's investigation of the causes of war a gaudy proceeding, but anyone who has been in attendance at the Senate Office Building is impressed less with its gaudiness than with the drabness of the goings-on. The first day the unusual presence of John P. Morgan and his cohorts overwhelmed everything else and his huge bulk dominated the scene. Little Senator Nye, the chairman of the committee, was swamped in the Morgan wake.

Senator Nye is easily the least impressive of all the inquisitors. It is difficult to describe him except to say that he seems more like a nervous county attorney than a United States Senator.

SENATOR NYE, 43 years old just a month ago, is spry, nervous and thin. His favorite color is far from gaudy. It is brown. He appears at the hearings in a brown, double-breasted suit. A reddish-brown fountain pen is cocked in his breast pocket, its golden clasp gleaming as the flashlights pop. He wears a light brown shirt. And his tie carefully blends. He sits at his paper-littered table, flanked by the redfaced Senator Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri and the tall, well-dressed, benevolent-appearing Senator from Michigan, Mr. Vandenberg. Sometimes he puffs a cigar; more often he drags deeply at a cigarette. His nervous blue eyes, beneath his light brown hair, peer rapidly from left to right. He misses nothing.

Sometimes a trace of sneer spreads over his sharp and pleasant features. When he asks a question he is consistent, logical, understandable. But he doesn't bark. He purses his lips, squints his eyes, appears to be thinking deeply and talks slowly in a pleasant voice. He is firm when he thinks a witness is evading the answer, but never threatening, and he neither points nor waves his arms. He is not one of those, "Where was you on the night of October 18?" kind of prosecutors.

Senator Clark, the Missourian who masks his cutting questions always with a smile or a grin, is the one who can do the most verbal damage. Neither is deferential to the millionaire witnesses; but they take no obvious sadistic delight in trying to make Morgan or Whitney or Lamont squirm. Perhaps they are aware that this is impossible. Morgan and Lamont have a way of not getting ruffled no matter what is asked of them.

To an unbiased observer the silent Vandenberg seems the most aware of the announced design of this inquiry, which is not to prosecute the bankers, but to learn from hitherto unrevealed facts how intricate are the international veins of finance, especially during a war. He sits there, cool, well-groomed, poised.

* * * *

THE other day the mustached Raushenbush, secretary of the committee, had, in his slow, hesitating, professorial manner, brought out certain facts regarding Britain's attitude toward the United States in 1916. Messrs. Morgan and Lamont interpreted it one way, and there was as nearly a wrangle as the hearings had produced up to then. Mr. Vandenberg said nothing. But he reached for a pamphlet, old and worn. He marked it with a slip of pink paper. He passed it to Senator Clark. And with a triumphant gleam Senator Clark read the words of Lord Reading which amply supported the committee's contention. But Mr. Vandenberg did not stay to gloat. He was in the corner at the drinking fountain when Clark, with his sharp voice, read forth Lord Reading's damning words.

With amazing informality the three committeemen carry on their quiz. There is no witness chair off by itself. When one of the bankers is asked a question anyone of the three may answer, and sometimes all three do at once—Morgan rumbling, Lamont high pitched, Whitney cutting—a strange yet cultured cacaphony of measured words. Orderliness prevails generally, with no gavel rapping, and Capitol cops have little to do except to see that such visiting dignitaries as drift in from time to time get comfortable seats.

THERE is no apparent animosity between the bankers and the politicians, but there is an obvious psychological difference of approach to the subject at hand. Nye, the former newspaper publisher; Clark, the author of a biography of John Quincy Adams, whom he called "Old Man Eloquence," especially do not speak the language of the international bankers. They do not look at the world from the same windows. In the field of high finance they are somewhat lost, and so they ask questions that their "opponents" try in vain to bring down to the patois of the hustings. This is all much fun to listen to, but it slows things up.

Ambling, garrulous and devoid of crackle, the hearings, nevertheless, are the best show in Washington. That is, if you are willing to sit there by the hour, listening to every word, following the devious trail of international banking and finance which leads, every now and again, to something which looks very sensational when you read it, bereft of its wordy trappings, in the morning newspaper. But, as one grizzled reporter said wearledly after a busy day of taking notes:

"You know, this darned 'trial' would be o. k., only it hasn't any sex angle."

Where the Democrats Will Convene in June

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Interior of Philadelphia's Municipal Auditorium, where the Democrats will hold their 1936 convention. Built at a cost of $5,350,000 five years ago, the main hall will seat 13,500. The stage, from which this photo was taken, will seat 1,500 more. The hall is near the University of Pennsylvania, less than two miles from hub of city.. Pennsylvania never has had a Democratic National Convention. The Republicans favored the State three times, and all were held in Philadelphia. The last time the Republicans met there was in 1900 to nominate McKinley for second term. Fremont was nominated in Philadelphia in 1856, and U. S. Grant renominated in 1872.

Democrats Pick Philadelphia

convention city, carried on in good humor, was the only dissension marking the meeting. Earlier in the day a resolution praising President Roosevelt and the New Deal was adopted viva voce. The only "no" came from Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia. He also declined an invitation to the White House for luncheon with other members of the national committee.

Louisiana's Democracy was unrepresented at the meeting. Former Gov. Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts, a critic of the New Deal, sent Daniel F. O'Connell in his place, while former Gov. Ruby Laffoon of Kentucky, who fell out with President Roosevelt last fall, was absent and unrepresented.

Two-Thirds Rule Studied.

These omissions in the complete harmony of the national committee's quadrennial meeting to select a convention city, however, were passed by without comment. There was lusty applause for Chairman Farley's opening remarks, castigating the party's adversaries and defending the New Deal and applause for all the spokesmen of the cities contending for convention later in the day.

In the middle of that struggle, when Farley desired a recess in order to determine what should be done about Philadelphia's unexpected bid, the committee without dissent or discussion adopted a resolution fixing the day for June 23 and authorizing the chairman to name a committee to make all the arrangements necessary.

The "poker game" for the convention got under way when Senator McAdoo arose to make his plea for San Francisco. This part of the meeting was greatly enjoyed by Vice President John M. Garner, reputed to be one of the ablest poker players on Capitol Hill. Garner, committeeman from Texas, earlier in the day was named a vice chairman of the committee. He sat on the platform with the committee's officers throughout the day and it was suspected that he played a substantial part as liaison officer with the White House in the decision which finally set the convention to Philadelphia.

The Californian was called on first because on the roll his State preceded both Illinois and Pennsylvania. He thought the roll should be called by competing cities, which would have given him the last word, but the committee declined to change the order of procedure.

McAdoo "Opens Pot."

After pointing out San Francisco's advantages, he asked whether "this is a poker game where you can raise your bid or must the original bid stand." The chairman first said only one bid could be submitted, but quickly changed his mind. He ruled that Senator McAdoo could raise his bid later.

"Very well, I open the pot with a bid of $150,000 and a convention hall free of cost to the committee," announced Senator McAdoo.

Committeeman Nash, of Illinois, said others would present the advantages of Chicago. All he wished to say was that "with Senator McAdoo opening the pot, Chicago stays in the game." Thereupon Robert Carr, Albert D. Lasker, George Young and Senator J. Hamilton Lewis pointed out the central location of Chicago, its fine hotels and transportation facilities, its mild June weather and its hospitable people. Several urged the Democrats to "return to the scene of democracy's prior triumph"—meaning the 1932 convention, held in Chicago.

Governor Earle's Plea.

Albert M. Greenfield, known as the real estate "king" of Philadelphia, took charge of the presentation of the case for that city. Mayor S. Davies Wilson spent 20 minutes reciting every advantage possessed by the City of Brotherly Love, including parks, universities and shipyards. He implored the Democrats not to overlook the opportunity of having the President accept his renomination "standing in the shadow of the Liberty Bell."

"Philadelphia," said Mr. Greenfield, "bids $200,000, in addition to free use of the municipal auditorium and control of all concessions. Actually, this gives the Philadelphia bid a value of $250,000 to $300,000. This money is the committee's, to use as it desires, if it comes to Philadelphia."

The broad smile on Farley's face turned into a glum expression. He did not seem to know what to say. Even a battery of photographers could not get him to smile as he posed accepting from Greenfield $50,000 more than he had expected to get from the convention city and that much more than the Republicans received.

"Are there any more bids?" finally asked the chairman.

"San Francisco bids $201,000," replied Senator McAdoo.

"But Philadelphia is offering $1,500 in prizes," reminded Mrs. Miller.

"I'll match the money for the prizes," said the Californian.

"How about Chicago?" hopefully asked Farley.

"It's going too high for us," asserted Nash.

"How about a free convention hall, is that included in Chicago's bid?" asked the chairman, and in an aside he said, "Democrats haven't seen checks like these in many moons."

There were whispered consultations among the Chicagoans and finally they decided to meet the offer of a free hall. But they would not raise their money bid. Farley finally suggested a 15-minute recess. He, Vice President Garner and several officers of the committee retired to a suite on a lower floor.

When they came back Farley denied he had consulted the White House. Garner made no comment. But word went quickly around the room to "vote for Philadelphia." By this time Farley was again smiling, as he patted the check for $200,000.

Dirtiest of Campaigns.

The meeting got under way with an address by Chairman Farley, predicting "a campaign of defamation"—"the bitterest and certainly the dirtiest political struggle that any of us here can remember." He said the Democratic party would have "to combat misrepresentations, outright lies and every form of foul whisperings you can imagine."

"Moreover, you must realize," he continued, "that the assault on the Roosevelt administration will be financed with the largest slush fund on record, contributed for the most part by those who have neither public conscience nor private scruple. They are men who are interested only in getting back the inordinate privileges which have enabled them to exploit the people in the past and who hit below the belt, or do anything else that they think may give them hope of regaining their pirate ascendency.

Charges Fact Perversion.

"In the ranks of our foes you will find not only the financial gangsters whose extortions were so largely responsible for bringing on the Hoover panic, but others, who for one reason or another, hate Franklin D. Roosevelt or who are accessories of the exploiters."

Farley contended that it was "a ridiculous perversion of the facts for the New Deal's adversaries to represent the party conflict as a battle between the business interests of the country and a mythical group bent on substituting a socialistic, communistic system for the economic processes that have made this Nation the greatest, wealthiest commonwealth in the world."

The party's adversaries, he continued, likewise try to make it appear that there is a division in Democratic ranks. He asserted that "whenever some irresponsible adventurer—thinks he sees an opportunity to launch a political racket—which means whenever he scents the possibility of getting financial backing—our Republican friends announce the advent of a Democratic revolt." But political changes do not come about that way, he added.

Turning to the Republicans, Farley said none knew, least of all the Republicans, who their presidential nominee would be. He said "they dare not nominate Herbert Hoover, the most eminent proponent of the do-nothing policy that brought on the great economic calamity" and "they cannot nominate Senator Borah because that veteran of 30 years of political battling must be poison to the crowd whose league is championing the crusade against all that is being done to keep the country safe from the depredations of its sponsors."

He likened those adversaries of the New Deal, who in the crisis of March, 1933, enjoyed its help, but now have turned against it, to the farmer in Aesop's fable who, on finding a frozen snake in his barnyard, took it into his home and warmed it back to life, only to have the snake bite the farmer's children.

In concluding, Farley asked the national committee to "remember as we go into the fight that Franklin D. Roosevelt is the hope of every man who suffers, and the foe of every man who does wrong."

Cut in Number Of U.S. Agencies Asked by Byrd

5 Senators Are Proposed to Investigate, Abolish Useless Bureaus.

Calling for retrenchment in Federal spending, Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, yesterday introduced a resolution proposing that a committee of five Senators investigate and recommend legislation looking toward abolition of useless agencies and consolidation of overlapping Federal bureaus.

Asserting his purpose was constructive rather than critical, Byrd predicted "hundreds of millions of dollars" could be saved by a reorganization of Government departments.

In a statement, Byrd said:

"Both political parties in Congress have given support to the spending program. A case in point is the $4,880,000,000 relief bill when a majority of the Republicans in the Senate voted in the affirmative. The Republican Party may criticize now, but cannot escape responsibility for the support given these measures when enacted."

He quoted the clause in the Democratic platform of 1932, reading:

"An immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus and eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of Federal Government."

Continuing, he asserted that "boards, commissions, bureaus and departments in the last three years have sprung up like mushrooms. We have today at Washington the most complicated and costly bureaucracy in the history of our country. The only relief is a drastic reorganization and simplification of the Federal Government."

Cincinnati, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Kroger Grocery and Baking Company reported today preliminary figures indicated sales in 1935 were $6,563,733 over those in 1934.

Total sales for the year were reported as $227,739,064 against $221,175,331 in 1934. The company had 102 fewer stores at the end of 1935 than at the close of 1934.

a deep bertha of fine white lace. A corsage of orchids was caught in the bertha, and she carried a huge white fox fur on her arm.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull were absent from the Cabinet group, but the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry A. Morgenthau were present, the latter wearing a gown of black velvet with a deep fichu of lace around the shoulders. The Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern, who returned recently from the Philippines, made their first appearance at the White House this season, Mrs. Dern wearing a gown of eggshell lace fashioned with a long train and a deep shoulder cape of the lace.

Farley Is Alone.

The Attorney General and Mrs. Cummings were there, the latter in a gown of tomato-colored crepe, fashioned simply, with a long train, and a coronet of twisted crepe of the same shade as the gown and gold lame in her hair. The Postmaster General, Mr. James A. Farley, walked alone, Mrs. Farley having returned to her home in New York, and Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, wearing a gown of silver lame with a girdle of bright green crepe, was escorted by Commander Ostrander. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harold L. Ickes, was absent, as was the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins. However, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace were there, as were the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper. Mrs. Wallace wore a gown of mulberry satin trimmed with a paler shade of lavender, and Mrs. Roper was in a gown of wine-colored velvet with a bertha of creamy lace.

Most members of the United States Court of Appeals were present, although the Chief Justice and Mrs. George S. Martin were unable to attend. Judge and Mrs. Charles H. Robb were there, the latter wearing a gown of rose-colored flowered lame. Their daughter, Miss Priscilla Robb, was in a gown of chartreuse satin made on simple lines. Judge and Mrs. Joshiah van Orsdel attended, accompanied by their niece, Mrs. Kathryn Spellman Warren, who wore a gown of sea green chiffon. Mrs. Van Orsdel was in a gown of delft blue lace trimmed with brilliants. Judge and Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, popular members of the court, were also present, the latter in a gown of gold lame, and the "baby" member of the court, Judge Harold M. Stephens, was accompanied by Mrs. Stephens, who wore a gown of Copenhagen blue crepe trimmed with a corsage of scarlet flowers.

Many Others Present.

From the United States Court of Claims there were the Chief Justice and Mrs. Fenton W. Booth, the latter in a gown of black lace and chiffon, accompanied by their daughter, Miss Virginia Booth, who wore a gown of black crepe trimmed with white; Justice William R. Green and Justice Richard S. Whaley.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia was represented by Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, Mrs. Wheat being absent because of illness; Justice Jennings Bailey, Justice and Mrs. Peyton Gordon, the latter in a gown of black crepe trimmed at the decolletage with brilliants; Justice and Mrs. Jesse C. Adkins, Mrs. Adkins wearing a gown of black moire with a corsage of white flowers.

Justice Joseph W. Cox was accompanied by his son, Mr. Melville Cox. Justice and Mrs. Oscar R. Luhring were present, the latter in a gown of black crepe with a deep shoulder cape of heavy silver lace; Justice and Mrs. James M. Proctor, the latter wearing black velvet, and Justice and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, Mrs. Letts in a gown of mint green satin. Mrs. Daniel W. O'Donoghue, wife of Justice O'Donoghue, was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Eleanor O'Donoghue, and her niece, Miss Helen O'Donoghue. Mrs. O'Donoghue wore a gown of black chantilly lace, and the young girls wore sapphire blue chiffon fashioned on Grecian lines and white crepe gowns, respectively.

Other Judges on Hand.

Chief Justice William J. Graham, of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, was accompanied by Mrs. Graham, who wore a gown of black velvet, and their daughter, Mrs. Henry Obst, who was in a gown of gold lame. Judge and Mrs. Irvine Lenroot were present, the latter wearing wine-colored brocaded velvet. Their daughter, Miss Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, wore a gown of black lace.

Judge and Mrs. Oscar E. Bland had with them their daughter, Miss Helen Bland, who wore a gown of black net dotted with dark green chenille, and trimmed with straps of green velvet. Mrs. Bland wore a gown of emerald green crepe, trimmed with bands of brilliants. Judge and Mrs. Charles S. Hatfield were there with their young daughter, Miss Norma Hatfield. Mrs. Hatfield wore a gown of black crepe threaded with silver and trimmed with jade clips, and her daughter was in a frock of white lace.

Judge Nathan Cayton, of the Municipal Court, was there.

The United States Attorney and Mrs. Leslie Garnett held a small reception in one corner of the state dining room, Mrs. Garnett wearing black lace.

Others glimpsed in the gathering were Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, wearing a gown of fuchsia taffeta on bouffant lines. Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, the latter wearing a gown of printed chiffon, were deep in conversation with Gov. Case of Rhode Island, and nearby were Senator and Mrs. Henry F. Ashurst, the latter in cherry red velvet, and Senator and Mrs. William H. King, Mrs. King in a gown of ruffled brown tulle. Mr. Bernard Baruch was among the guests.

Mrs. Walsh a Guest.

Also there were Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer, Mr. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Thomas J. Walsh, widow of Senator Walsh, most attractive in black ruffled net; Mrs. Charles Hoyt March, wife of the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, in black crepe; the Solicitor General and Mrs. Stanley Reed, accompanied by Mrs. William Becker, president general of the D. A. R. Mrs. Reed wore emerald-green taffeta and Mrs. Becker was in electric-blue crepe. Also seen were the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Harry W. Blair, Mrs. Blair wearing dark blue lace; Mrs. Mahlon Pitney, wife of the late Justice Pitney, in blue and silver lame; Mrs. Wrisley Brown, in black satin with emerald clips, and her daughter, Miss Catherine Brown, in peach-colored taffeta trimmed with brown; Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court, in black and silver lame; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, in scarlet moire; Representative Caroline O'Day, in black and white printed crepe.

Also seen in the State dining room chatting with their many friends were the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, the latter wearing a very handsome gown of ice blue satin with a deep decolletage and a large diamond and star sapphire clip holding the cowl neckline in place.

Mrs. James Lawson Karrick, who wore a gown of wine-colored velvet, was accompanied by her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. David Karrick, the latter wearing a gown of nile green crepe; Mr. and Mrs. Wade Ellis, the latter had on a gown of tomato crepe with gold threads through it; Miss Elizabeth Howry and her sister, Miss Mary Howry, the former wearing a gown of dark blue lace and the latter a gown of white moire with an off-the-shoulder neckline; Mr. and Mrs. F. Eberhart Haynes, the latter formerly Miss Frances Gore, wore a frock of white satin with a bandeau of white feathers; Miss Phyllis Hight and her brother, Mr. Frank Hight, the former wearing a gown of orchid-colored crepe with jeweled clips at the shoulder line; and Mr. Edward Van Devanter.

LeFevres in Throng.

Others there going from room to room, stopping many times to greet friends, were Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. LeFevre and their debutante daughter, Miss Sally Mitchel LeFevre. Mrs. LeFevre wore a gown of lilac chiffon with a full pleated skirt, while her daughter wore a charming frock of deep ivory moire fashioned with a tight bodice and a high neckline and a long full skirt and a Juliet cap of pearls in her hair. Mr. and Mrs. William N. Sturtevant were there, the latter wearing a robe de style gown of black taffeta, trimmed with black velvet, and a corsage of purple and green orchids; Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Miller, the latter the former Miss Elizabeth Kennedy, who wore a gown of coral and gold lame; Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Miller, brother-in-law and sister of Senator Joseph Guffey. Mrs. Miller wore a gown of pale pink satin made on simple lines.

Miss Betsy Dern, who accompanied her parents, the Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern, wore a frock of shimmering white satin trimmed with flame-colored red velvet. Mr. and Mrs. Macpherson Chricton were among the guests, the latter wearing a gown of black crepe with a collar of white and silver brocade with a bandeau of white feathers in her hair.

H. H. Levi Weds Elaine M. Iglo At Baltimore

Bride Given in Marriage by Mr. S. Fruehauf, Her Uncle.

The marriage of Miss Elaine Mann Iglo, daughter of Mrs. Madelyn Iglo, of Baltimore, to Mr. Harold H. Levi, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Levi, of Washington, took place last evening at the Belvedere Hotel, in Baltimore.

The ceremony, which was performed by Dr. Abram Simon, of Washington, and Dr. Edward Israel, of Baltimore, in the presence of a large company, was followed by a dinner for members of the two families.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Samuel Fruehauf, was gowned in white satin, and wore a voluminous veil of tulle. Her only attendant was her cousin, Miss Bertha Rose Spandour.

Mr. Levi had as his best man Mr. Lester Haas, of Shreveport, La. The ushers were Mr. Malcolm Levi, brother of the bridegroom, and Mr. Maurice D. Rosenberg, jr.

Mr. Levi and his bride will sail from New York tomorrow on the Queen of Bermuda for a cruise to Bermuda and Nassau. Upon their return January 27 they will make their home in Washington at the Alban Towers.

Golden Wedding To Be Observed

Former Member of Congress, Wife, to Be 'At Home' January 14.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Burke will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on Tuesday, January 14, when they will be at home from 4 until 7 o'clock in their apartment, 1870 Wyoming avenue.

Mr. Burke, formerly member of Congress from South Dakota for many years, now resides in Washington with his family. He served as Commissioner of Indian Affairs from 1921 to 1929, when he resigned, and in 1930 was appointed commissioner to the International Colonial Exposition at Paris. With his family, Mr. Burke resided in Paris for more than a year, returning to Washington in 1931.

No cards have been issued.

Comdr. Humbert Weds Miss Crown

Couple Will Depart Soon for Central America.

Miss Marguerite Crown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Henry Crown, of Washington, became the bride of Lieut. Comdr. James Humbert, U. S. N. Medical Corps, December 21, at 11:30 o'clock in the Church of the Nativity. The Rev. John Fannan, rector of the church, officiated in the presence of the immediate families.

Later in the evening Dr. Humbert and his bride left for a trip to Indiana, and at present are residing at the Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va., where they will be until January 14, when Dr. Humbert will join his ship for a trip to Central America. Mrs. Humbert will temporarily make her home in Panama during his absence. Dr. Humbert was recently on duty in Washington.

Beauty Depends On Developing Best Features

If That Happens to Be Your Hair, Make Utmost of It.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THERE ARE MANY beauty theories that are fine as such, but highly impractical when we try to apply them. One however, that is as sound as it is sane revolves around making the most of your best feature. Just forget the others, and accentuate your hair, your eyes, or your skin, whichever is most outstanding. The result will be highly satisfactory.

Now if your best feature is your hair, you want to do all in your power to make it so lovely that your bad skin, or pug nose will not be noticed. A group of hair specialists comes to your aid with a delightful pine soapless shampoo.

It's the ideal thing for those who live in hard water districts and "do" their own hair. They doubtless know from experience that it's virtually impossible to rinse off all the soap. As a result, even after a thorough washing, the hair is dull and sometimes greyish from a residue of soap.

The pine soapless shampoo, as it's name implies, contains the beneficial, and refreshing oil of pine, other cleansing ingredients, but no soap and no alcohol. It tends to penetrate the scalp, freeing it from dry and peeling cuticle, and leaves it delightfully clean, and the hair soft and lustrous—and manageable.

New Compact of Gold.

There are some compact and lipstick sets that are lovely to look at but disappointing to use. There are some that have quality to recommend them but aren't attractive. There's one we know about, however, that it both beautiful and useful.

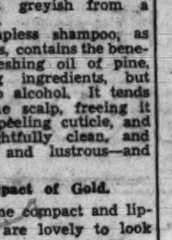
Both compact and lipstick cases are gold tastefully trimmed in bits of carved ivory. The powder and the rouge are all you could desire. It's a set you'd be thrilled to own!

More Whistling Kettles.

Those of you who want to add music (you might call it that) to your kitchen should give a thought to the whistling kettles. There's a group of new arrivals in a downtown store and they are whistling themselves into dozens of kitchens. Instead of being just kettles, these are beautifully designed, quite modern, and loads and loads of fun! When the water for your tea starts to boil, you'll hear a warning whistle from your kettle.

Mickey Mouse Banks.

Children are inclined to be spendthrifts. They toss their pennies and nickles to the four winds if they aren't trained to save a little here and there. Child psychologists say the best way to interest the tots in preserving their small fortunes is to present the idea attractively. One concrete way lies in the Mickey Mouse banks now selling in the notions department of a downtown store. These are like miniature pirate chests decorated with Mickey and Minnie Mouses. There's a slit in the side that will accomodate nickles, pennies, dimes, quarters, silver dollars and bills.



An amazingly small sum will buy you a very smart linen blouse—if you know where to shop for it. Take a hint from us and try the first floor of a large downtown store. Here are blouses and more blouses, white, pink, green, red, blue and brown, in six or seven different styles.

Be prepared for a shock when we tell you the price is only $1!

Bath Powder Reduced.

ORDINARILY if you were to "a-shopping go" for a tall tin of a fine grained misty bath power made by a well known company you'd pay 75 cents for it and think it was a bargain. It's such a large container, and the powder is so subtly fragrant.

Durable Baskets.

WASTE PAPPER baskets made of a heavy durable fiber are well worth your consideration. They're made to last. You could play football with them and they'd take it standing up.

KAY FRANCIS.

Style Secrets of Kay Francis Are Revealed in Interview

Women Should Make Fashion Their Slave, Screen Star Declares; Practical Suggestions by Actress Chosen Among Best-Dressed Women of 1935.

By Frances Mangum.

WOMEN SHOULD make style their slave and not be slaves to style. This is the fashion theory of Kay Francis, as expressed to The Post Fashion Editor, in an interview conducted through the mail.

In the movie star's own words, "When you choose your clothes be influenced more by what's becoming to you than what's in fashion. If necessary, modify styles to suit your own individuality."

Miss Francis' fashion ideas are well worth heeding since "practicing what she preaches" resulted in her being chosen for 1935's list of best-dressed women.

She does not think that style, like talent, is something you have to be born with. On the contrary, it's a quality any woman can develop, "but it takes lots of study," she said. "Of course, it's worth it."

Three Necessary Steps.

Three necessary steps for style development she lists are:

1. Know your type.
2. Play up your best points.
3. Stick to smart simplicity.

As regards dressing to type, she suggests, "A woman can become many types by her choice of clothes, but she should do so only when there is a particular occasion. In my case, for instance, to fit a screen role. Otherwise, finding one's natural type and emphasizing it by means of the wardrobe is much the best thing to do."

For herself, Miss Francis prefers tailored suits and strikingly simple evening gowns. In fact, she says she definitely "dislikes frills and furbelows." Her favorite colors are black and green and she does not hesitate to repeat these in her dresses and accessories over and over again. She wears blue.

Problem of Height.

Since she is tall and has to take her height into consideration in selecting clothes, it is only natural that she has a good many pointers for others faced with the same problem.

One pertains to tunics. "They break one's height," she explained. "Next, drapes. They can be managed to hide one's worst points and bring out one's best. Gowns with sleeves very broad at the shoulders make you look big as well as tall, so they should be chosen with care. Flat heels are bad, too. They only call attention to height."

If a tall person is going to be stylish she must pay strict attention to the way she stands, Miss Francis emphasized. "She must carry her height proudly," she added.

She also warned women against over-use of jewelry.

"Some one good piece is at times most effective, and does wonders to highlight a frock," she wrote. "Too much of it smacks of a Christmas tree!"

Cheese Dishes Favorite Food Of Americans

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

"DON'T FORGET the cheese" admonished former President Calvin Coolidge as he ordered a slab of apple pie in the Senate Restaurant, one day while he was Vice President and he added "Cheese is an all-around good food."

Coolidge spoke by the book, for he was himself a cheese expert being the possessor of a small cheese factory in Plymouth Notch which had augmented the family income for a score of years. He was but echoing the words of a famous epicure who once remarked. "Show me the man who doesn't love cheese and you show me a man whose soul is dead to the joys of life."

Practically every land has its cheese tradition and in the United States the choice ranges from the snappy American cheese beloved of New England and the North, to the creamy Philadelphia cheese and so called cottage cheese of the South.

Cheese has twinkled on civilized menus through the centuries. Lucullus, whose name is now a synonym for luxury in diet, regaled his guests with fragrant goat-milk cheese. Dr. Samuel Johnson and his companions often drank a toast to the fat Cheddar laid before them while the mighty Napoleon leaned from his saddle to kiss the peasant girl who first introducted him to Camembert and in the gay nineties we see Edward VII of England climaxing his truffles and crepes Suzetto with well marbled Roquefort.

Cheese has been described as a "moody food." What is meant by that, of course, is that to appreciate its full values it must be served properly and its companions must be chosen with care. Some cheeses may be used for cooking, other varieties would not fit in with such handling.

When cheese is used for cookery these four points should be remembered. Allow it to stand at room temperature until softened, cheese to be grated must be thoroughly chilled, cut cheese in small pieces on a board with a large knife and when it is put through a food chopper, use a fine knife.

Halibut Steak a la Rarebit.

Boil halibut or cod steaks in salted water until fish is tender (about 10 minutes). Place on platter and pour cheese sauce over the fish. Garnish with parsley and sliced lemon.

The cheese sauce is made by cutting one-half pound American cheese into small pieces. Melt two tablespoons of butter in top of double boiler. Then add to this 1½ tablespoons of flour, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, ¼ teaspoon paprika. Blend thoroughly. Then add 1½ cups of milk stirring constantly until mixture is thick. Cook 10 minutes, stirring occasionally Add cheese and beat with an egg beater until the cheese is entirely melted.

Stuffed Cabbage a la Gratin.

Trim away the loose outer leaves of a firm head of cabbage. Cut a deep well out of its stem end. Then mix together 2 cups cooked ham, 1 cup bread crumbs and 3 ounces of grated American cheese. Fill the center of the cabbage with this mixture. Steam for 2 hours until cabbage is tender then serve with a cheese sauce.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

SHE WEARS HER CLOTHES like a Parisian, but she's never given much thought to home decoration before. Naturally she is puzzled as she starts out to furnish her new small flat, which includes a bedroom, and a living room. She has always admired either English or provincial furniture and wonders if she can furnish her flat completely in one of these styles on a budget of $500. For the living room she has rust mohair pulley curtains which she would like to utilize. What walls, furniture, rug, coverings and lamps? For her bedroom a peach (more of a pale brown) mohair spread with embrodery in green, brown and rust. What colors for walls, draperies, etc? * * * With rust curtains, robin's-egg blue walls would be lovely in the living room. Then we would suggest ceilings in yellow, rug in brown, sofa in blue-green, one easy chair in yellow and a pair of easy chairs in a figured material, perhaps a floral that is warm and mellow. The lamps and accessories in copper. Eighteenth century English furniture is a satisfying, enduring style, and reproductions are available at reasonable prices. On the other hand, if she decides on provincial early American maple, it is available at even more reasonable prices. In the bedroom she could achieve an interesting effect with rust walls, peach colored ceiling, an off white rug, ivory curtains, ivory lamps.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I see your column has helped many. I hope you can help me, too. In the first place, I'm going with a young man about 20. I'm 17. He is forever speaking of our future together. He even thinks we can soon be married. I have never said "yes," for I don't love him. I like him as a friend, but for a husband I could not stand him. What must I do? I don't want to break his heart by telling him I don't love him and I don't know what to do.

* * * *

To top things off, I'm staying with a lady and her husband, helping the lady with her housework. I think she is a very nice lady but her husband is showing me too much attention. Every time she is not at home he tries making love to me. I will not have it. I tell him he should be ashamed, with the nice wife he has, but he says he loves me. I don't love him and never could. Please tell me what to do.

* * * *

Do you think it would be better for me to leave here? I would if I had another job. I would like a position in an institution for children. If you know of any please let me know. I need work of some kind. I hope you can help me, and thank you very much. BECK.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR BECK: Don't be silly. Young men in love thrive on suspense and opposition when seeking the hand of a maiden in marriage. Tell your young man you don't love him and that you never expect to marry him. His heart won't be broken beyond repair. If he's made of the right stuff, such a declaration will only strengthen his determination to make you his wife. And if he never wins you, still he will survive. Without realizing it, you may be acting on the cautious theory that "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," in keeping the young man dancing attendance by letting him think you love him. Maybe your motives aren't really as tender-hearted as you would like to believe. Be that as it may, if the young man's emotions and intentions are sincere, it is up to you to be equally sincere, even at the expense of hurting him some and depriving yourself of a beau for a time.

* * * *

Leave the love-making married man's home as quickly as possible. A married man who has no more principle than to attempt to break down the moral reserve of a 17-year-old girl who is a member of his household is potentially capable of any scoundrelly. If he fails in his flirtatious efforts to win your affections, he is apt as not to retaliate for his failure by spreading scandalous reports about you. If the situation is ever discovered by his wife, it is not improbable he will place full blame on you, and then you may be ordered from the house.

* * * *

Don't wait on someone to find you a job; get busy looking for one. Advertise in the "situation-wanted" columns of the Sunday newspapers; read the "domestic help wanted" columns. There is always demand for children's nursemaids and mother's helpers. There are a number of institutions for children in Washington, anyone of which might have need of your services; but you must take responsibility of inquiring. There is the Washington Home for Foundlings, Episcopal Home for Children, St. Ann's Infant Asylum, and the Swertzell Methodist Home for Children, among others—all listed in the telephone directory.

* * * *

Miss Edith Holloway, of the Family Service Association, will give you a confidential interview if you will call DIstrict 6883. Ask for Miss Holloway and say you have been referred by me. If another job is the best solution of your problem, you will be helped to find one suited to your training and abilities. Or, out of National Youth Administration funds, it may be possible to help you resume your unfinished education, if you have a home and parents to go back to. I believe you need to keep in close contact with some older person who will give you wise social guidance at this critical period in your life. For that reason, I would like you to know Miss Holloway. M. H.

Common Words Should Be Used To Teach Child

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

HOW AND WHEN a child begins to talk is to a large extent conditioned by his environment. The child who is treated as if he were a deaf-mute is not apt to express himself early or clearly. The child who hears baby-talk is apt to use it and consequently to be nearly unintelligible to strangers.

The child who is talked to normally and easily by those about him so that he has frequent opportunity to hear and learn the correct names for things and people, is more than likely to talk early and to start out with a good, practical working vocabulary.

It is an excellent scheme for the mother to look upon the baby as a foreigner just landed in a strange country. It is her duty to make him acquainted with the life about him as quickly as possible. For this reason he must know the names of things. As she dresses and undresses him, therefore, she names over the articles of apparel as they are put on him, very distinctly and without confusing comment, letting him see each article as she names it.

Conversation on the part of the mother, even if it consists chiefly of single words such as band, shirt, socks, dress, sweater, hood, makes dressing a companionable occasion, and the habit of chatting with the baby carries over into the later months and years.

Babies are not puppets. From the moment they are born they are capable of receiving impressions and learning. When they start to speak varies according to the child and his opportunity. The least a mother can do for her child is to give him a chance to learn the moment he is ready.

Librarians List Books Designed To Stop Crime

Volumes Chosen With Eye to Explaining Social Duties to Adolescents.

A LIST of books designed to prevent juvenile delinquency has been compiled by officials of the New York Public Library. The books were chosen according to Dr. Harry Miller Lydenberg, director of the library, with the youthful or adolescent mind in view "particularly in relation to his contacts with his fellows and with the public he lives and works with."

The books recommended follow:

Fiction.

"Fairy Tales," by Hans Christian Anderson, illustrated by Arthur Rackham.

"Fairy Tales," by Hans Christian Anderson, illustrated by Charles Robinson.

"Lorna Doone," by Richard Blackmore.

"The Last of the Mohicans," by James Fenimore Cooper, illustrated by Newell Convers Wyeth.

"David Copperfied," by Charles Dickens.

"The Tale of Two Cities," by Charles Dickens.

"Silas Marner," by George Eliot.

"Les Miserables," by Victor Hugo.

"Captains Courageous," by Rudyard Kipling.

"Men of Iron," by Howard Pyle.

"Quentin Durward," by Sir Walter Scott.

"The Black Arrow," by Robert Louis Stevenson.

"Gulliver's Travels," by Jonathon Swift, illustrated by Willy Pogany.

"Seventeen," by Booth Tarkington.

"Tom Sawyer," by Mark Twain.

"The Mysterious Island," by Jules Verne, illustrated by Newell Convers Wyeth.

"From the Earth to the Moon," by Jules Verne.

"Michael Strogoff," by Jules Verne.

Nonfiction:

"Margaret Ogilvy," J. M. Barrie.

"Exploring With Beebe," by William Beebe.

"The Cruise of the Cachalot," by Frank T. Bullen.

"Microbe Hunters," by Paul De Kruif.

"I Like Diving," by Thomas Eadie.

"The Story of My Life," by Helen Keller.

"The Story of Robert Louis Stevenson," by Jacqueline Overton.

"Up From Slavery," by Booker T. Washington.

"Jane Addams of Hull House," by Winifred E. Wise.

"The Epic of Mount Everest," by Sir Francis Younghusband.

A series of conferences between librarians and Children's Court officials was suggested by Dr Lydenberg in submitting the list to Justice Jacob Panken, in whose court Dr. Lydenberg recently sat for a day to familiarize himself with the type of cases for which the reading assignments have been suggested.

Nazis Widen Raids To Old Furniture

By the Associated Press.

Berlin.—Nazis will raid homes now in search for grandpa's plush sofas and pet furniture.

"Junk Controlers" have been appointed for every block to direct a nation-wide clean-out of whatever plush chairs or sofas there may be still in use.

"We must beautify all homes just as we did with factories and get rid of that junk, although it may have been inherited from one generation to another," Germans will be ordered.

Australian Geographer in Capital

DR. MARIE BENTIVOGLIO. Harris & Ewing.

Babbitts But Not Mrs. Babbitts Preferred by Woman Professor

Dr. Marie C. Bentivoglio, of Australia, Here to Lecture Before National Geographic Society Tonight.

By Dudley Harmon.

DR. MARIE C. BENTIVOGLIO, Australian professor, lecturing before the National Geographic Society here tonight, confessed yesterday to a liking for Babbitts, a dislike for Mrs. Babbitts.

"My motto in traveling," she said, "is the one engraved over the portals of your Union Station, which says that those who seek the riches of the Indies must take the riches with them. Before I visit a country, I read all about its culture, people and manners. So when I decided to come to America, it seemed a good idea to read, among other things, the novels of Sinclair Lewis.

"Therefore, I was all prepared to meet Babbitts. I was not disappointed. I have met quite a few. But I admire them.

"In the first place, they're honest. They know their limitations. And, after all, aren't their limitations the product of their environment? The same man wouldn't be a Babbitt if he'd grown up in Europe. But here he's brought up to think that a two-car garage is more important than a good etching, and that a tiled bathroom is one of life's high spots.

"Babbitts are sincere. They want to get the most out of life. They're rather pathetic in their doubts as to whether they succeed in doing so. Remember Babbitt's vague yearnings for something he feels he's missed, this occasional bitter dissatisfaction with things as they are? Poor George! It wasn't necessarily his fault if he never knew that there can be more to life than making money.

"Anyway, he's better than Mrs. Babbitt. She's a weak, negative, social climbing little nobody."

Dr. Bentivoglio has four degrees after her name. In addition to being an A. B., M. A., and Litt. D., she's the only woman ever to have received the degree of doctor of philosophy from Oxford University. She has also studied at the Sorbonne and other European universities.

The subject in which Dr. Bentivoglio received the degree of doctor of philosophy is the complicated one of crystallography. Difficult to explain, it is related to chemistry and metallurgy and means, roughly, the study of the structure of crystals. At present Dr. Bentivoglio is a lecturer on geography at the University of Sydney, in Australia.

Winning the degree of doctor of philosophy from Oxford University is something of a feat, especially if you're a woman. Not until 1920 did Oxford condescend to bestow degrees of any kind on women, although they had previously been allowed to attend lectures there.

Pioneering should come natural to Dr. Bentivoglio, however, judging by what she had to say about the pioneering spirit of Australian women in general. According to her, they have entered many unusual fields. One of her friends was the first person to grow rice in Australia. In 1924 she imported some from California, and today, 11 years later, she is conducting a flourishnig business.

"Another unusual field for women is that offered by an organization called the Bush Nursing Association," said Dr. Bentivoglio. "This association sends out nurses to families which have settled in the lonely bush regions.

"There are women aviators, too. Also women lawyers, doctors, dentists and journalists.

"Although women have invaded the professional field, they have not yet entered business to any great extent. We have no women executives, as you do. This is because Australia is primarily an agricultural country. We're just beginning to go in for business."

Three-Minute Limit Set on Good-by Kiss

How long should it take a man to kiss his wife good-by?

In Tulsa, Okla., he is allowed three minutes, according to a recent ruling of the traffic board.

The question came up as to how long a car should be permitted to remain in zones set aside for discharging passengers. A member of the board suggested it should be long enough to permit a man to kiss his wife good-by. Mrs. Ivan Willis, the only member of the board, when asked how long that should be replied: "Three minutes."

Appendicitis' Cure Demands No Laxatives

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

ALTHOUGH skilled physicians capable of making an accurate diagnosis of a case of appendicitis, are available in almost every community, deaths from this preventable disease continue to mount. The reason is that we do not give enough attention to that ordinary symptom—pain in the abdomen. It is common and hence may be disregarded. At the outset we may lay down the rule that when abdominal pain—and this should include stomach ache, cramps, or soreness—continues for a few hours, an investigation should be made. More often than not inflammation of the appendix is either present or lurking in the offing.

Speed is essential in acute appendicitis just as it is in many disease conditions. For example, in diphtheria, if antitoxin can be given early, life will be preserved. If it is used after the infection has produced a poisonous toxin, a gallon of serum may be without avail. An appendicitis victim who can reach a good hospital within 24 hours of the onset of pain has very little chance of passing into the next world, unless his case is mismanaged. If he waits 48 hours he has a 5 per cent chance of interviewing St. Peter. After 72 hours the death rate is above 10 per cent.

In a clear-cut case of appendicitis the final outcome depends largely upon the home remedies that have been applied before the physician has had an opportunity to intervene. If the sufferer has been given a laxative the angel of death has been greeted effusively and been offered a comfortable seat. Abdominal pain—with or without nausea, vomiting, and constipation—is the one cardinal symptom of inflammation of the appendix. Yet how many will reach instinctively for a laxative or a cathartic on the assumption that the symptoms point toward a mild indigestion. The erroneous assumption is that the patient will be quite all right as soon as the bowels have been emptied. Regardless of the type of laxative—castor oil, milk of magnesia, or epsom salts—the effect is much the same. The infection is spread, peritonitis invited, and not infrequently the abscess formed in the appendix is ruptured. Pain is a warning that something is wrong. If it follows an indiscretion in diet, or the consumption of infected food, the ensuing diarrhea and vomiting will quickly empty the digestive tract. Nature will endeavor to free the bowel from its poisonous contents.

Whenever the appendix becomes infected leucocytes—the white cells of the blood—gather in force to destroy the bacteria. Movements of the intestine cease and if food is given vomiting usually follows. In many cases nausea and vomiting form a part of the picture.

Each year approximately 30,000 deaths occur in the United States from this disease. Three-fourths of the fatal cases received laxatives for the relief of abdominal pain. Appendicitis is primarily a disease of youth. Forty per cent of all cases occur between the ages of 10 and 20 and the average age of those attacked is 27 years.

We can conquer the problem if each of us will remember that pain in the abdomen, nausea, a slight headache, and complete loss of appetite should be regarded as prominent signs of the disease. Reason dictates strict adherence to the following rules:

1. In abdominal pain that continues for two or three hours, a laxative should never be given. No attempt should be made to empty the bowel, even by enema.
2. Nothing should be given by mouth, not even a sip of water.
3. The patient should be in bed and allowed to assume the most comfortable position. The presence of the disease may sometimes be recognized by the posture of the patient, who will lie with the knees drawn upward in an effort to relieve the pressure of the abdominal muscles on the inflamed area.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

An Open Letter to Commissioner Valentine:

Dear Commissioner: I thought you'd like to know of Broadway's reaction to your appointment of Lieut. Mickey McNamara's dawn patrol squad. For the first time in the past three years, chorines can go home after their 2:30 a. m. show without being molested and insulted by cheap hoodlums. For the first time in three years, a man can take his wife into a Broadway club or restaurant without fearing that he'll be hit on the head by some bottle-wielding thug. The fact that McNamara, Tommy Aulbach and Barney Ruditsky are roaming up and down between Times Square and Fifty-ninth street has had a tremendous influence for the betterment of the Stem, in the wee small hours when people are spoiling for a fight. Every restaurant owner who operates all night on Broadway owes you a vote of thanks, for this trio have made the tough guys go 'round and 'round, and they come out here . . . behind the eight-ball.

Sincerely, ED. SULLIVAN.

To Fred Baehler:

Dear Freddie: Promised to keep you in touch with the town now that you are convalescing, but nothing very hot last night. Mrs. Vincent Astor posed with the Onyx Club Band at the Swarthout premiere, and Manager Bob Weitman looked very swell in tails . . . Sonny Trowbridge (remember her?) married Attorney Harold McCamey in Pittsburgh . . . Dave Herman, who will rejoin the Abe Lyman Band, is marrying Hazel Lorraine January 29 . . . Doug Fairbanks posed with Lord and Lady Cavendish at the Montmartre last night. The former Adele Astair's hubby is a good scout. After the photog got the picture, Cavendish said: "I posed for you. Now you pose for me like a good fellow" . . . Understand the Fairbanks wedding is set for China in February . . . Palladium, the old Casino de Paree, is after the Ritz Brothers and may get 'em. Surprised the Hollywood didn't grab them. They'd be dynamite . . . Bill Dwyer will be feted at Miami Tuesday and he rates it . . . Columbia Pictures ousted Bruce Gallup, Frank Spikert, Hal Hodes and others in yesterday's shake-up. Hy Daab replaces . . . Harry Richman will do a $26,000 week at the State.

P. S.: Forgot the only real news. Nobody got a hot-foot last night at the El Morocco. And Jingle Bells has his own private barber at the Story Club, one flight up. The town's in a lather of merriment.

To Mrs. Le Roy:

Dear Ruth: Thanks for your nice letter and all of us are tickled that you're feeling a lot better. So that's why Hal has been out of action—because he wanted to stay with you while you've been ailing—he's a pretty swell guy, huh? Hurry up back. We miss the both of you.

As ever, Ed.

To Bert Lahr:

Dear Bert: Please settle an argument. Did Jeanne Gale suggest that hilarious addition to the Soup Scene in "Scandals," you know—"the ladle goes 'round and around, and the soup comes out here"? Hastily, Ed.

P. S.—And ask that monkey what she and Matty Rosen are doing around town. It looks as though they've kissed and made up.

To Gladys Swarthout:

Dear G. S.: Caught your picture, "Rose of the Rancho," last night at the Paramount, and while there may be some who don't like the story, there will be none who won't like you. You're gorgeous, Honey. A lot of people will tell you that the shape of your face reminds them of Gloria Swanson, and they'll be right. But just between the two of us, you resemble Mrs. Anatole Friedland, who was a pretty good singer, herself. At any event, congratulations on your debut. The best to you, E. S.

To Sophie Tucker:

Dear Sophie: I understand that you're going to be a year older Sunday, and it calls to mind the fact that you are about the only girl on Broadway who doesn't mind a reminder of birthdays. Thanks for hours of grand entertainment, and thanks for the cheeriest of all reminders—that life begins at 40. Many happy returns. Ed.

To Rt. Rev. Fulton Sheen:

Dear Doctor Sheen: The other day, in listing my all-time preferences, I rated you as the greatest orator I'd ever heard. Since then, the mail has been burdened with letters pointing out that you are not a Jesuit, that your name is spelled S-h-e-e-n, and that you are Professor of the Philosophy of Religion at Catholic University. But, at least, I had one fact straight . . . you ARE the greatest speaker I've ever heard, and Jesuits should feel pleased that I assumed that only their order could produce one like you. Sincerely, ED. S.

On the Air Today

"CONGRESS SPEAKS" takes to the air again today with Representatives Louis Ludlow, of Indiana, and Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, discussing "Neutrality" on the inaugural program, WRC at 5. One line of the announcement, in view of the recent stir over broadcasting of the President's message at night, is particularly interesting. It says: "Listeners also will be given a preview of the issues of the 1936 Presidential race during this special series arranged by N. B. C."

Ann Harding and Herbert Marshall make their appearance tonight (scheduled originally last Friday night) in "Hollywood Hotel's" presentation of "The Indestructible Mrs. Talbot," at 9. Frances Langford will sing "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You," which is enough recommendation of this show for this observer.

Today's highlights:

Marie C. Deal: With Charles Haycraft (soprano and barytone) in Federation of Women's Clubs program, WRC, at 11:15 a. m.

Margaret Santry: Interviews Ethel Barrymore Colt, at 4:45.

"The Other Americas:" Latin and South American music, WMAL, at 10:30.

Elsie Ferguson: Actress pays tribute to radio, "Magic of Speech," WRC at 2.

Culbertson On Bridge

Doubling on Suspicion.

If a player waits until he has the setting tricks in his hand before doubling the opponents, he will have to content himself with meager returns. Such golden opportunities are rare indeed. Much more often, one may assume from the bidding that either or both of the opponents may be stretching hands and that, therefore, a penalty double can hardly go far astray. The best gauge of a close double is whether a redouble is likely.

North, in today's hand, certainly could not count five tricks against the opponents' three no trump contract. Nevertheless, on the far-from-impressive bidding, he made a good sporting double.

West, dealer
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 spade	Pass	2 diam's	Pass
2 spades	Pass	3 diam's	Pass
3 no tr'p	Double [final bid]

North correctly reasoned that West, had he held a very good hand, would not have merely rebid his spade suit over East's two diamond response. And that East, for that matter, could not have great strength when the only rebid he could make was three diamonds.

The five of clubs was the opening lead. Declarer, in order not to block the suit, won with his ace and led a diamond up to the dummy. South, of course, refused to part with his king, and East's queen held the trick. The queen of clubs was played, and when North held up his king, the jack followed. North won and returned the fourth club.

Declarer then decided to play for a 3-3 spade break (not that he was optimistic about it) and, in order to retain an entry to his hand, led a spade from dummy and played his own seven. North won, cashed his fifth club, and promptly returned the spade queen. Declarer won, cashed the other high spade, and threw North into the lead with a fourth round. But North still had a diamond for an exit card. The last two tricks were won with the defenders' high heart combination, for a penalty of 500 points.

Perfect play by the declarer, involving the removal of North's diamond as a card of exit, would have reduced this penalty to one trick.

Electric Rate Cut Program Is Due Today

Roberts to Submit Plan to Reduce Company Rate of Return.

Would Restrict Profits From 7 to 6 Pct. on Agreed Base.

Definite proposals for cutting the basic rate of return allowed the Potomac Electric Power Co. under its sliding scale will be introduced today by People's Counsel William A. Roberts at a hearing before the Public Utilities Commission.

The company now is permitted a basic return of 7 per cent on an agreed "rate base" figured to exceed $66,000,000. Roberts will suggest reduction of the return to 6 per cent. He will contend the company still will be able to make a large return with such a plan.

Hinman D. Folsom, special assistant corporation counsel, assigned as legal adviser to the commission, also is prepared to offer evidence conducive to a slash in the permitted basic rate of return.

Large Reduction Forecast.

The hearing opening today is a prelude to the annual January hearing for annual adjustment of the rates charged to consumers for electric current. Last January the commission ordered a consumer rate reduction of $147,000. The consumer rate cut this January is expected to be about the same, under present available figures.

Final calculations on excess profits of the company during the past year, however, will not be available for a few days. The consumer rate hearings are to be held beginning either January 20 or 27.

Under the present sliding-scale plan for the power company, if its profits run between 7 and 8 per cent on an agreed rate base one-half of the excess over 7 per cent is to be considered for consumer rate reductions in the succeeding year.

How Cuts Are Fixed.

If profits run from 8 to 9 per cent, three-fourths of the excess returns are to go to later rate cuts, and if profits are above 9 per cent, five-sixths of the excess are to be considered for rate cuts. The company, however, keeps all its profits, no matter how large, for any completed year. In other words, the rate cuts are scheduled for the future on the basis of past excess profits.

Every year in the long period since the sliding-scale plan was adopted for the power concern there have been excess profits which allowed rate cuts in succeeding years.

Recently the commission adopted a sliding-scale plan for the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light companies fixing 6.5 per cent as the allowed rate of return.

Also, officials recalled yesterday, the commission in 1934 won a legal contest over a 10 per cent cut in charges of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., which was figured to leave the company a rate of return of slightly more than 6 per cent.

These two facts are offered by Roberts as strong arguments in support of a reduction to 6 per cent in the allowed basic rate of return for the power company under its sliding scale.

300 Canaries Twitter and Sing But Songs Are All for Naught

By Virginia Lee Warren.

More than 300 canaries are virtually singing their heads off at the Hamilton Hotel, but their fancy warbling won't get them a thing this morning when the judges of the National Capital Canary Club pass out the cups and ribbons to best birds.

All the entries will be judged on their feathers and figures, not on the music they can make.

Evidently this point has not been made clear to the birds. From the moment the show opened yesterday morning until late last night they were in a fine frenzy of running up and down scales, trilling elaborate cadenzas and stretching for high notes.

Melody to Slow Up.

But their melodic outpouring will probably slow up considerably tomorrow, the final day of the show. While they are on exhibition—three whole days and nights—they must go without baths and cuttlebone, things necessary for the larger life of canaries.

According to M. D. Smith, show secretary, the exhibition's purpose is to show the superiority of domestic songsters over imported warblers. All of the birds entered in the show at the Hamilton were hatched within a few miles of Washington.

Owners admitted they work for color effects, as if the canaries were dahlias or sweet peas. The whole purpose of cross-breeding, one exhibitor explained, is not to increase the song range, but to put a tinge of blue on the wings or a dash of brown on the tail.

The result of this tampering with Nature was evident yesterday, not only in the cinnamon, green, white and buff shades, but in the arrangement of feathers.

Ruffled Effects.

Most of the birds still belong to the common stream-lined type, but there are a few, notably the Dutch Frill, which go in for all sorts of curled and ruffled effects.

The ruffles and furbelows, however, don't help the song. They are simply thrown in for those who like something different, Smith explained.

In pointing out the superiority of domestic birds, the show secretary declared the warblers born in this country are hardier, live longer and have more vitality. Some of the canaries, he said, live 12 years. Any reasonably healthy one should be worth five years of song.

According to the men and women milling in front of the cages yesterday, a bird usually is closer to the heart of its owner than is a dog or cat.

Hazen Indorses Move to Form A Crime Board

Prettyman Also in Favor; Plans to Be Laid at Dinner Monday.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman yesterday issued statements praising the initiative of the citizens' committee of 51 in arranging a meeting of representative officials and residents to discuss establishment of a crime commission here.

The discussion, announced last Monday, will be held Thursday at the Hotel Mayflower.

"The Commissioners and all other law-enforcement officers of the District are in complete accord with any well-founded program that will result in mobilizing public support for the efforts of those whose professional duty it is to enforce the laws," said Hazen.

Arranged by 51.

"Fifty-one public-spirited citizens, serving as a committee, have arranged this dinner so that people of Washington may hear crime-commission authorities explain the management, procedure and accomplishments of crime commissions that have functioned in other communities, to the end that we might intelligently decide whether or not Washington could benefit through the creation here of such an organization.

"The crime problem is one of the most complex and serious issues confronting the people of the United States today. It is a matter that affects every official and every citizen of every State, county and municipality, and one in which all of us must be willing to interest ourselves."

Commissioner Hazen stressed the importance of co-operation between civic, social, police and all other agencies interested in the crime problem.

"Without wishing to comment without hearing the facts in the issue on the merit of creating a crime commission in Washington, I do wish to commend the committee sponsoring the dinner for the public service which it is rendering," he declared.

Prettyman to Be Guest.

Prettyman, who, along with Commissioner Hazen and a number of other Washington leaders, will be an honor guest at the civic subscription dinner meeting Thursday night, said:

"The problem of crime prevention and criminal law enforcement, even in the minor cases in which my office has some responsibility, is of vital concern and importance to every citizen. Moreover, the important view of informed and thoughtful people who are not involved in the daily whirl of the details of these matters is often of great value. The assistance of such people is greatly to be desired, in my opinion.

"I regard it as a privilege to meet with the distinguished speakers who are not involved in the daily whirl of the details is often of great value. The assistance of such people is greatly to be desired, in my opinion.

"I regard it as a privilege to meet with the distinguished speakers who will address the crime commission dinner and to hear what has been accomplished elsewhere to unify civil and official forces in combating crime."

Dinner meeting committee headquarters reported yesterday that a limited number of tickets is still available. Reservations may be made by telephoning National 4200 or remitting $3 by check to Crime Commission Dinner Headquarters, 1337 E street northwest.

E. A. Harriman is the new president of the Harvard Club of Washington. Other officers elected at a meeting Wednesday night in the University Club were Ralph H. Hallett, secretary, and Howard Leroy, treasurer.

Ralph W. Close, Minister of the Union of South Africa, discussed the constitution of his country.

A new mothers' study group, headed by Mrs. Hanna Bernhardt, was announced yesterday by the Jewish Community Center. Dr. Herman Eisenberg will open the first of a monthly series of lectures Monday night.

Citizens Urge U. S. Buildings Through City

Grouping of Offices in One Section Hit by Group in Northeast.

The Northeast Conference of Citizens Association last night decided to ask its member groups to urge that future public buildings be located throughout the city and not in the northwest section alone.

Conference members said the scattering of Government buildings throughout the city would alleviate traffic conditions, aid in the beautification of the city and help in clearing up slum districts.

Discussing the 1937 budget the majority of the conference felt that District budgetary powers should be divorced from the Federal Budget Bureau.

In a discussion of Commissioner George E. Allen's proposed bill to give the District power of referenda, opinion favored the proposal in principal. Exclusion of the voting privilege to those maintaining the ballot outside the District, however, caused disagreement, certain members feeling that since the issues voted upon would be of local nature only, all residents of the city should be allowed a voice.

Ft. Myer Pageant Will Start Today

Fort Myer's hard-riding soldiers and the best equestriennes of Washington will join twice today to present the fort's annual pageant, featuring precision rides, artillery drills, tandem rides, jumps, hunt rides, circus riding, rodeo and a battle between covered-wagon pioneers and Indians, all in the new riding hall at the fort.

The pageant will be presented at 2:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m. today, with repeat performances tomorrow, and is for the benefit of the post's recreational and welfare fund.

Lieut. Col. Jacob L. Devers, Sixteenth Field Artillery, is directing the pageant, with Lieut. Col. Clarence C. Benson, Third Cavalry, in charge of tickets; Maj. George H. Millholland, in charge of programs; Capt. John B. Reybold, costumes and scenery, and Capt. Marion Carson, ushers and arrangements.

Drug Clerk's Kick Foils Holdup Attempt.

A young clerk in the People's Drug Store at Thomas Circle last night employed a well-placed kick to thwart a robbery.

The clerk, Ernest Goodwin, 26, was behind the drug counter when a man walked in and stuck a knife against his ribs, ordering him to open the cash register, police said.

Goodwin complied, but when the man turned his head to see if anyone was coming toward the counter, he kicked him in the chest, and then grappled with him. The alleged robber was overcome and turned over to police.

Police said the hold-up attempt was made by James Burns, 51, of the 900 block of H street northwest, who was held on an investigation charge.

Senate Body Edges Nearer 'Red' Inquiry

King Weakens on Stand Against Committee Investigation.

Hildebrandt Commends Mrs. Norton's Refusal to Aid Move.

The Senate District Committee showed signs of weakening yesterday before the demands of the Federation of Citizens Associations and the Public School Association for a Congressional investigation of radical influences in the schools, especially in textbooks.

Senator William H. King, chairman of the committee, said several days ago he does not believe the situation merits an investigation, but yesterday he showed an inclination to appoint a sub-committee or to hold hearings before the full committee.

Simultaneously, Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee, was congratulated by a colleague for opposing a House investigation of alleged teaching of communism in the National Capital. The congratulation was in the form of a letter from Representative Hildebrandt (Democrat), of South Dakota.

The Senate committee will meet in executive session early next week to decide whether to investigate or ignore the charges.

Wants Hearing Closed.

George Sullivan, speaking for the federation, at first proposed an executive investigation to which federation delegates and school officials would be invited. Such a procedure would receive a minimum of publicity, a result Sullivan feels is to be desired.

"I think you would get more disagreeable publicity from a star chamber hearing than an open public investigation," Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, interrupted.

Sullivan told the committee he had tried vainly to persuade the Board of Education to withdraw without publicity certain textbooks which seemed to him pro-Marxian. Failing in this, he said he was forced to take the matter before the federation.

The federation and other bodies which have made their own private investigations, he said, are prepared to submit a great deal of factual data to substantiate their charges.

"If we are all wet," he said, "why that's that. But we've got documentary evidence."

Questions Hazen.

Senator King several times asked Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of Commissioners, and Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman if the inquiry didn't fall properly within their jurisdiction.

"No, no," they chorused. "We haven't any jurisdiction at all over the administration of the schools."

"Well, I'm for the anti-communism rider 100 per cent," said Senator King, "and I think Mr. Prettyman was wrong in his opinion that it permits the teaching of communism as a subject."

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, representing the Public School Association, appeared next with two handfuls of clippings, letters and other material.

Reads Ballou Statement.

To add emphasis to his observation he read from a written statement of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, in which he said that children are being trained in anticipation of "a new social order."

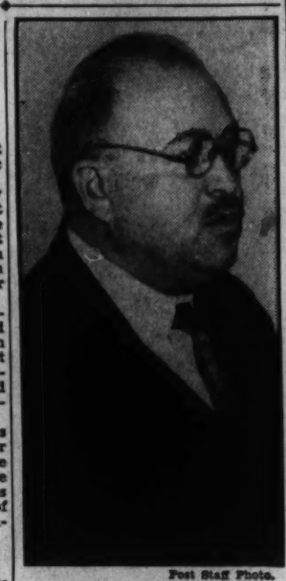
"What is this new social order?" he asked significantly.

Senator Capper suggested to Chairman King that hearings being scheduled or that a sub-committee be named to make an investigation, but King said that no decision would be reached before next week.

Prettyman, called upon to explain his opinion, said that he had meant that in the teaching of communism a teacher should not indicate approval of the social system by even so much as a gesture or the inflection of voice.

Schools Forbid Play That Digs at Congress

Dr. Kramer Declares 'We Must Be Careful' of Lawmakers.



Post Staff Photo.

DR. STEPHEN KRAMER.

Congress may be funny—but it won't be funny in the public schools.

That was made clear yesterday by Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, assistant superintendent of schools, when he barred a new play, "Benevolent Blackmail," by Morgan Baker, from presentation at Roosevelt High School auditorium on January 21 or at any other time.

The school chief, frankly disapproving advance notices which had described the play as a satire on Congress, laid down the dictum that if "Mother Goose" were ever so described by a press agent, it would be barred from the District of Columbia school system's stages.

"They're tooting it in the papers as a slap at Congress," Dr. Kramer told reporters who asked about the suppression. "We're a part of the Government. We can't put ourselves in the position where one branch of the Government is lambasting another.

"We Must Be Careful."

"You know we have to go to Congress on a lot of things, and we have to be careful. We may be innocent as children, but Congress might not think so."

The rule followed by the Community Center Department, headed by Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, in determining what activities should be permitted to use school facilities, is this, Dr. Kramer said:

"We do not allow the use of school buildings for those events that are going to give rise to acrimonious discussion."

Plays dealing with Congress probably would fall in that classification in general, he said. At the same time, he revealed also that on Monday use of school buildings had been denied to persons wishing to hold a Tom Mooney protest meeting. A group of George Washington students, intending to put on a play dealing with the life of Walter Reed, "Yellow Jack," by Sidney Coe Howard, were instructed to delete profanity before permission to stage the play would be granted.

Cites Press Notice.

Specifically, Dr. Kramer said this announcement, appearing in The Post of Sunday, January 5, was cause enough for barring Baker's play:

"Long recognized as one of the least meritorious occupations of self-seeking Congressmen, the matter of patronage and job-juggling has up to now escaped the satirical and analytical pens of American playwrights, but that situation will be remedied, etc."

It was that statement he had in mind when he added:

"If 'Mother Goose' were to be staged with that advance publicity, it wouldn't get into the school system."

Baker, who conducts "The Federal Diary" column for The Washington Post, announced last night that the play would be presented instead at the Wardman Park Theater beginning February 4.

He said he was "amazed" at the school action, and added:

"True, the plot deals with congressional job-seekers and scrambled politics. This, however, should not make the play undesirable for presentation in a public school. Facts and fiction incorporated in the theme of the play are common knowledge among residents of Washington, including school children."

Story of Graft.

The play describes the way a newspaper columnist, by threatening Federal officials with exposure of grafting practices unless they help him build up a patronage machine, overthrows a Senator's State dictatorship and is himself elected Senator.

It is Baker's first full length play, although he has authored several one-act productions staged on less ambitious scale.

Among its shots:

A Representative says he wasn't elected to run an employment agency . . . He's too old to remain a Representative, but just young enough to be a Senator . . . One wonders how the snow can stay on the Capitol dome while Congress is in session . . . A social climber is No. 401 in the Capitol's 400 . . .

Benevolent blackmail by the columnist reveals, in exchange for jobs, that only two relatives of one official are on the pay roll, instead of 12 . . . A purchasing agent builds a $500,000 home in Maryland . . . Overtime turns one agency into a sweatshop . . .

You could travel first class and still save 15 of the 20 cents a mile traveling allowance awarded Congressmen . . . There aren't 50 out of 435 Representatives who use their $5,000 clerical allowance wholly for that purpose.

A. F. G. E. Unit Banned.

Representatives of Resettlement Lodge, No. 206, American Federation of Government Employes, announced last night that they had been forbidden permission by school authorities to use the Thomson School auditorium for a meeting to discuss the case of Tom Mooney.

District Told To Sift Effect Of Zone Law

Non-Conforming Clause Said to Harm Property Values.

Off-Sale Liquor Shops Blamed by Doctor Before Senators.

The Senate District Committee yesterday instructed the District Commissioners to make a thorough study of the effects of the non-conforming clause of the District zoning law on the devaluation of residential property, especially since the legalization of liquor, and to report its findings and possibly amendments to the statute.

After listening to the complaint of Dr. T. S. Palmer, of 1939 Biltmore street, about the inroads made into residential sections by off-sale liquor establishments, Chairman King and Senator Capper, ranking minority member, expressed concern over the plight of private home owners.

Dr. Palmer proposed an amendment to the zoning law which would (1) require property holders to make substantial deposits before asking for a change in zoning and (2) would abolish non-conforming privileges upon three-year notice by stepping up realty assessments each year.

Problem Is Perplexing.

Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman said he doubted the legality of the proposed amendments but admitted that the non-conforming clause of the zoning act is one of the most perplexing problems before District authorities.

"When the zoning law was passed about 15 years ago," he said, "everybody thought that small shops in residential areas would expire before this time and the property would revert to residential use. But they haven't.

"The law states that all 'structural changes' are prohibited on this non-conforming property, but this phrase has been subject to varied interpretations."

Senators King and Capper both expressed the view that the beauty of the National Capital and the value of residences are being impaired by the inroads of commercial zones. They expressed particular alarm at Dr. Palmer's statement that liquor shops are arising where harmless tailor shops existed before the zoning law was enacted.

Hazen Was Overruled.

"I, myself, am opposed to the issuance of licenses to any persons who operate on non-conforming property in residential sections," interposed Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, "but I was overruled."

The committee discussed in a general way the traffic problems, and Commissioner Hazen revived the plan, long talked of at the District Building, of abolishing downtown parking. He admitted there is much opposition to it, however. Members of the committee suggested the elimination of parking on one side of narrow streets.

Three bills were ordered reported favorably to the Senate. They would authorize District authorities to suspend driving rights of non-residents who violate certain traffic regulations in the District, provide for the reorganization of the municipal steam boiler inspection service, and authorize the issuance of a healing arts license to Dr. Dexter Reynolds.

Gridiron Feast Gate Crasher No Deputy, Doherty Contends

The gate-crashing feat of Gerald W. Sickler—he was the fellow who strolled into the Gridiron Club's banquet and served 14 subpenas on Henry L. Doherty—may have been in vain, after all.

Sickler has admitted he had no right to be at the Gridiron party. Now Doherty, whose Cities Service gasoline stations have made him many millions, says Sickler had no right to be a special deputy.

Through his attorneys, Woodson P. Houston and K. K. Spriggs, Doherty yesterday contended in the District Supreme Court that the service of the 14 subpenas on him by Sickler was "illegal," and they asked the court to declare them "nonserved."

Sickler, a former amateur actor at George Washington University, was appointed as a special deputy to serve Doherty after lawyers for the plaintiffs told the court that Doherty seldom was in Washington and was hard to find when he was here.

Doherty's lawyers contended yesterday that the court did not follow the statutory requirements when it appointed Sickler as a special deputy. They argued that there was no authority for his appointment unless it be found in common law and then only on a showing that the coroner and the sheriff were disqualified from mailing the papers.

At Least Half of Next Season's "Ten Best Pictures" Already Have Been Seen

Recent Cinema Bookings Have Attained Peak

Later Works Must Be Top; Spitalny and Givot; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

What with the lists of the "ten best pictures of 1935" hardly cooled off in type—and type, in case you are not accustomed to the composing room, can get very hot, indeed—and a new symposium of local drama desks coming along on next Monday, it may be a bit premature to look forward to next year's bestowals of the accolades, but, it seems to me, at least half of next year's "ten best" already are on view.

I mean to say that it will be an extremely difficult business to delete from any conscientious and authentic best list for 1936 such recent releases as "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Crime and Punishment," "A Tale of Two Cities" and "The King of Burlesque."

All of these were released too late to be eligible for consideration in the poll annually conducted by Jack Alicoate's Film Daily, the 1935 results of which were revealed in this space yesterday morning.

Here are five films that must rate distinguished appraisal on any man's list. Perhaps some of them will have been forgotten by the time the next voting comes around, provided the cinema is able to continue its remarkable assumption of artistic eminence during the next twelvemonth.

Dostoievski Is Doubtful.

There might be a bit of controversy over "Crime and Punishment." It is a sordid and depressing story, adapted with rare fidelity from Dostoievski's novel of the same name, in which Peter Lorre and Edward Arnold portray the principal roles.

Marian Marsh also plays an important part in the working out of the final destiny of the man, who, somehow, seems to be a sort of counterpart of Victor McLaglen in "The Informer," and Tala Birell and Elisabeth Risdon, one of the noted British actresses who once lent luster to Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," also lend something of their incomparable talents to the complete exposition of a dramatic narrative that is ttense, suspenseful, vivid and exciting.

I, for one, do not see how "Crime and Punishment" well could miss selection among the elect films of 1936. But strange things happen in this so-called "racket."

Of the other films I have named, there seems to be little doubt. Whether or not Shakespeare was truly reflected in Max Reinhardt's picturization for the Warner Brothers of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" there probably will be sporadic discussion and dispute as long as time goes on. It is always that way.

The Bard Seems to Win.

I am on the side of the students of Shakespeare—not that I am one—who perceive in the celluloid version of the classic fantasy a long step in the direction of cinematographic integrity and imagery in the apprehension of subjects heretofore held to be remote from the screen's ability to register effectively.

"A Midsummer Night's Dream," to this feeble intelligence, made a definite and distinct appeal as a new step forward in the artistic development of a medium that long has needed the inspiration and impetus of such profoundly eloquent expression as was imparted to it by Herr Reinhardt and his associates.

So, with 1936 scarcely past the period of New Year's Eve hangovers, here we have half of next year's "ten best" already to hand.

It will be interesting—or so I hope—to observe how nearly this forecast comes true.

The sudden death of Jack Gilbert removes a picturesque character from the current chronicle of the cinema. Married first to Olivia Burwell, John subsequently became the husband twice of Leatrice Joy, then married Washington's own Ina Claire and most recently was the husband of the blond and talented Virginia Bruce, who is said to be prostrated by the news of his death. The last time Gilbert was in the Capital, to the best of my poor memory, was when he came here with Jeanne Eagels as costar of L. Monta Bell's "Man, Woman and Sin," a picture of Washington newspaper life that aroused a storm of criticism after its release in December, 1927. Most of the scenes made in the Capital, owing to cloudy weather, had to be remade on the Coast, but that local adventure in film-making nevertheless lingers in many memories as a highlight in Washington's theatrical history by reason of the presence of John Gilbert. He never will be here again.

Spitalny Is Real Musican.

It seems not too much on the side of press-agentry—of which it is supposed to savor no whit — to record here that the stage bill at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater beginning today promises a high degree of artistic skill.

The headline attraction, of course, is Phil Spitalny and his orchestra of feminine instrumentalists, who supplant the male band he had some two or three years ago.

I have known Phil for a good many years now and never have known him in all that time to subordinate sound musicianship and an insistent demand for a worthy interpretation of standard compositions to any of the devious temptations of specious "showmanship." The thing must be rightly and intelligently done, or Phil will have no part of it.

Turned Down Contract.

I recall, for example, the occasion upon which this able maestro was offered a long-term contract for appearances of himself and band on the Loew time, provided he would reduce his playing personnel from 25 to 17. That sort of reduction would have nullified the musical effectiveness of all of his exclusive orchestrations.

Rather than sacrifice the intrinsic merit of his instrumental pre-eminence, Spitalny declined the flattering contract. With him, music comes first; the usual methods of the showshop run a very deep last.

Without having heard it, therefore, I feel that I can safely guarantee a grand performance when Phil and his girls cut loose on the Earle stage today.

And that isn't all. I feel, also, that I can safely guarantee a grand performance when George Givot and Joe Phillips, two of the principals with Jean Harlow and Spencer Tracy in "Riffraff," on the screen at Loew's Fox Theater beginning this morning, appear in person on the stage of the same playhouse as headliners of the vaudeville bill.

George sends along an autographed photo from the Coast which begins "Season's Greekings." That should give you a rough idea, provided you know with what adeptness he twists the English tongue into a remote semblance of what it might be like in the throat of an underprivileged Athenian.

George, however, is a college fellow who knows his way about and what time it is. So don't let that dialect, perfect as it is, fool you. He is a handsome dog in the bargain.

The line for you girls forms at the customary right. And please have your autograph books handy, so the boy won't be kept waiting. He will be exceedingly busy, socially.

Declined with Thanks.

Somewhere here on an excessively cluttered desk—we still follow the W. C. Fields system of filing, as explified in "The Man on the Flying Trapeze"—there reposes an invitation from Miss Dorothea Lewis to act as one of the judges in the forthcoming District one-act play tournament, a function we have fulfilled for the past several years.

It is with a distinct sense of regret that I find it incompatible with the best interests of the tournament and the conduct of this department of The Post to accept Miss Lewis' gracious invitation.

It comes to the ear of a dramatic editor that at least one of the executive board having the tournament in hand—himself once a drama editor, and, since, an embryonic playwright—has expressed himself in public meeting as of the firm conviction that the local drama desks are least of all equipped to execute the task of judging the one-act play tournament either with honesty or competence.

We of the Forlorn Estate!

We of the press are alleged by this young man to be under the spell of Hollywood. We do not know what the drama is all about. It would be much more to his taste to have judges of more erudition and less impulsively gelatin instincts to pass judgment on the virtues of the one-act plays to be submitted to the critical gaze of some board of appraisers which he hopes will not be composed of drama critics.

As far as I am concerned, this embryo George Jean Nathan has his wish.

I respectfully and gratefully decline the honor of being among the judges, thus relieving at least one of the interested parties of the bugaboo of that judicial incompetence of which he stands in such obvious dread.

Thanks for the beer and the buggy ride!

Close-to-Midnight Note.

That beer idea isn't so bad!

Potent New Stellar Teammates!

Today is the day when Washington picturegoers will see Jean Harlow for the first time as a "brownette," the platinum tinctures of her tresses having been subdued, for the time being, to make way for a darker complexion. More important, perhaps, is the fact that she is teamed with Spencer Tracy in "Riffraff," the screen feature at Loew's Fox Theater. This is an explosive item to which their joint talents are admirably attuned.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, Jan. 9.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN is always taking a bath. At least that is what people who try to get him on the phone are supposed to believe. Dick Powell likes to throw a musicale for his friends. Pictures are often previewed before they get the censor's seal of approval. Yet no one knows of a member of those audiences being ruined. Practically every one at a studio wants to be in pictures. The man who cleans the windows of the stars' dressing rooms at Paramount wears make-up and dresses like Gary Cooper while working.

It's strange to sit in a projection room alone and watch a flicker. It seems that the performers are talking directly to you. You can make all the noise you want, but you don't. You're unusually quiet. Sitting in a projection room with a friend is different. You gain the feeling of power.

If you don't like the picture you do what you always want to do in a theater—talk back to the performers on the screen. A producer refused to allow a writer into the projection room to see a picture with him. The writer said to the producer, "I'll see it in a theater with ladies and gentlemen."

If actresses changed their names when they married, the billing would be Margaret Wyler in "So Red the Rose," and Dolores Del Rio would be Dolores Gibbons, and it would be Bette Nelson in "Dangerous." Sally Eilers would read Sally Brown, and it would be Ginger Ayres who is in "Top Hat," and, of course, you know who Joan Tone is? But I guess the reason actresses don't take their marriage names is because theater owners would have to change the marquee signs too often.

Every studio, with the exception of Paramount, has a barber shop. The barbers are generally characters. Darryl Zanuck took his barber, Sam, with him from United Artists to Fox. He took him for laughs. When Zanuck went to Alaska he took Sam with him. The new barber at United Artists used to be Jack, but is now called Jock. Everything must be swanky at this studio . . . At Warners only the executives are permitted to use the barber shop. Camille Lanier, for a Christmas present, gave Randy Scott a long cord for his telephone so he could talk to her without getting out of bed.

Louis B. Mayer seldom goes on a set to watch one of the flickers he produces being made. He is very proud of the special noodle soup he has prepared in the Metro commissary. Jack Warner goes on sets when he has what he believes are noted visitors. He favors a banquet so he can try to tell gags. Irving Thalberg is the big conference man. He prefers all day conferences, and meals are sent in. Harry Cohn sits at his desk in his shirt sleeves. He knows what's going on at the studio and what isn't going on. They are telling so many tales about Darryl Zanuck that they are now listed as Zanuckdotes.

A group were discussing why the Marx Brothers' flicker, "A Night at the Opera," was a success. They agreed it was because Zeppo wasn't in it. To put over the next Marx picture, they decided that the novelty should be that Chico isn't in it. This picture should be followed by one without Harpo and, if a success, by another without Groucho. This would really be the hit flicker, for the billing would read: "Without the Marx Brothers—fill in the name——."

Dixie Dunbar is always on her way to a night club even when she is on her way to the studio.

"The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round." Paramount, Metro and Warners are bidding for the song and the writers, Farley and Riley, for a picture. On January 2 there were sold 43,000 copies of the song, the largest single day sale of any song in Tin Pan Alley history. Last October a record was made of the song and sent to Bing Crosby. He liked the song, but didn't believe it was commercial. "The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round" is now published by the Select Music Co.—and one of the owners is Bing Crosby. Jerome Kern wanted to purchase all rights to the song when he first heard it, but the song had been sold. Kern says that the strain which goes "Oh-ho-ho" is sheer inspiration.

Douglas Fairbanks never walks up a flight of stairs when there is a railing which enables him to hurdle the steps. Gloria Swanson and Herbert Marshall, when they lunch at the Vendome, try to avoid the curious by dining at a small table in the cocktail room. Myrna Loy is one of the most pleasant actresses to meet on a set. Every studio is practically a little city in itself. On the sidewalk of the Metro Studio, near the main door, there is this sign: "Private property. Permission to pass on revocable at any time. Goldwyn Production Corporation." There is a new and polite way of getting rid of people who don't know when to leave. The wife says to her husband, "Maybe we better go to bed so the guests can go home.

Garden Head, Irate, Flays Boxing Body, Cancels Entire Card

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

JOE CRONIN'S announcement that he contemplates shifting Bill Werber from third base to the outfield appears to this department to lend credit to the report that all is not milk and honey between the aggressive manager of the Red Sox and the equally belligerent Werber. Reports of their cordial dislike for one another have been recurrent in baseball circles ever since Werber started making good in the big leagues.

POVICH.

Back in 1934, when Werber started his climb to fame with the Red Sox and Cronin was fresh from his triumphs as the boy wonder manager of the pennant-winning Nats of the year before, the Berwyn boy undertook a one-man razzing campaign against the Nats' manager. From the Boston bench on every appearance of the Red Sox here could be heard the raucous voice of Werber heaping abuse upon the ears of Cronin.

Whether he was motivated for personal reasons that are his own secret or whether he merely believed it in keeping with his idea of aggressive baseball, this department is unable to say, but the fact remains that Werber singled Cronin out particularly for his belittling remarks. It was the more noticeable because Werber could be labeled just a fresh busher while Cronin was a recognized star. But the man who was the idol of baseball fans the Nation over apparently bore feet of clay as far as Werber was concerned.

Cronin, at first inclined to dismiss the highly personal attacks by Werber as the misguided chatter of a fresh busher, later was genuinely aroused when Werber persisted in overlooking no opportunity to ride him. Whenever Cronin was at bat, when they crossed paths between innings and when Cronin was on base, Werber singled him out for verbal abuse and before the 1934 season had ended the Nats' manager was in a mood to have it out with the Red Sox rookie.

NEITHER knew then that it was in the fates that they be cast on the same team the next season—Cronin as Werber's boss. Their association at Boston apparently contributed little to their esteem for one another. It was Cronin's misfortune to encounter his worst season in the big leagues at fielding his position and the fact that he was playing alongside of Werber probably reflected upon that latter young man's effectiveness at third base. Anyway, the left side of the Red Sox infield was often a joke as far as defensive ability was concerned.

Cronin, bigger and fatter than ever, did not go to his right with the same speed that he displayed in Washington. Maybe it was the broken wrist suffered at the fag end of the 1934 season that slowed him but the fact remained that balls hit between Werber and Cronin were going for safeties. Whatever opinions Werber might have been nursing of Cronin's fielding ability were probably substantiated in Boston last year. The Red Sox lost games as a result of their fielding weakness and that did not contribute any balm to the highly combustible tempers of either Werber or Cronin.

In justice to Werber it must be noted that none in the big leagues, not even Cronin, plays the game to the hilt more than the Berwyn boy. Victory is an obsession with him and he is not tardy in accusing his teammates of laggardly play. Once last summer when a game between the Red Sox and Washington threatened to go into extra innings because of a ball that First Baseman Dahlgren let go through him, Werber raced back to the bench, accused Dahlgren publicly of "laying down" and took a punch at him.

Before the inning was over the Red Sox had tied the score and Werber apologized to Dahlgren for the incident. Cronin generously excused Werber for his act on the grounds of his burning desire to win and the heat of battle, etc. But that is the kind of a guy Bill Werber is.

PURELY on comparative ability it is difficult to understand Cronin's motive in assigning Eric McNair to third base and shifting Werber to the outfield, where the Red Sox are already well stocked if not overstocked. During the 1934 season Werber was just about the hottest thing in the league at third base, with a swell defensive record and a batting average of more than .300. It is hard to conceive that in one season he has slipped to the extent where McNair can replace him.

McNair played only 11 games at third base for the Athletics last season and hit only .270. Werber batted less than that, it is admitted, but no longer than a year before it was impossible to mention McNair in the same breath with Werber as a third baseman.

If Werber is being dismissed from third base as a result of his failure to hit, it is also difficult to conceive how he can break into the Boston outfield which boasts such sluggers as Roger Cramer, Heinie Manush, Mel Almada and Dusty Cooke. Somewhere Cronin's reasoning appears to be screwy.

Who's Who in Wrestling Match?

In case you're interested, the gentleman in the lower berth is Detton. That is Referee Bortnick's hand under Cox's chin. It all happened last night in the wrestling feature.

Detton and Cox Draw, Amid Goings On

Man Out of Ring, Other Out of Head, Referee Missing at End.

By George Considine.

SPENDING more time in the aisles than they did on the mat, Dean Detton and Joe Cox fouled their way to a 34½-minute draw last night at the Turner Arena in the feature match of the weekly wrestling show. About 1,800 spectators witnessed the battle of the behemoths, which was considered one of the roughest exhibitions on record.

As a 34½-minute draw is just about without precedent, a deal of explanation might not be amiss. It seems that the men dashed across the ring and met in a resounding head-on collision. Groggily they slumped and, in process of slumping, fell out of the ring. After a bit of scuffling, Cox gave up the ghost and Detton crawled back between the ropes.

Cox Becomes Pugnacious.

When Cox recovered a couple minutes later, he was just dazed enough to want to fight all 1,800 customers either individually or collectively. He was finally subdued by a half-dozen fans, several ushers and three janitors. The match was completely forgotten in the resulting furore.

There was Cox rolling around on the floor. There was the entire gathering standing up, shouting. There was Referee Bennah Bortnick trying vainly to keep the customers out of the ring. There was Detton wandering glassy-eyed around the densely populated rostrum, looking for someone, anyone, to raise his hand in victory. But, alas, no one would do it.

Bout Declared Draw.

Ten minutes after Detton had given up in disgust and had retired to the showers and Cox had been carried off, Promoter Joe Turner announced that the bout had been declared a draw. Who declared it a draw probably never will be known. In spite of all that, everybody enjoyed the show and left the arena in high spirits.

In the semifinal Jack Donovan and Jim Wallis indulged in a flurry of excruciating buffoonery before the former emerged victorious in 18½ minutes by virtue of three Irish flips and a super-flop.

Ivan (the Terrible) Managoff more than justified his nickname as he won a roundly booed 13½-minute decision over Sid Westeridge.

Football Gate Elimination Is Urged

Dr. Pritchett Raps Game, Asks Abolition of Paid Coaches.

By the Associated Press.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan 9.—The elimination of not only paid coaches and gate receipts from college football but also cheer leaders is urged by Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, president emeritus of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

He described the fall sport as "simply not a gentleman's game."

Dr. Pritchett, who headed the Carnegie Foundation in 1929 when it issued its famous bulletin 23, expressed his current views in the latest issue of the Harvard Alumni bulletin. He wrote on the general topic of "College Ideals of Sportsmanship."

Not Gentleman's Game.

"Our football simply is not a gentleman's game," he stated. "That is the plain truth. The American boy is regimented by a paid coach, written up in lurid columns of the daily newspaper, fed at a special table—all in order to be offered up at a show that will command the largest gate receipts.

"The time has come when American institutions of learning should deal with this question of competitive sports sincerely and courageously.

"The way to bring football and other competitive sports back to the status of a game rather than of a business, is to follow the example set by our English cousins in their public schools and colleges. That is to abolish the professional coach and gate receipts.

"If coaching is done at all, let it be done by some old grad who does it for love and not for money." • • •

"If there is any sign more repugnant to good sportsmanship than the frenzied action of these leaders and directors of cheering, it would be hard to imagine. Under this vulgar development, the visiting team oftentimes has to contend not only with the home team but also the organized participation of an artificially stimulated audience."

Unseeded Netman Victor in Florida

By the Associated Press.

Coral Gables, Fla., Jan. 9.—A lone unseeded entry, Weston Painter, of Minneapolis, found himself tonight with seven seeded stars in the quarter-finals of the fourth annual Miami Biltmore tennis tournament. He won today from Jack Reitman, Montreal.

Other matches that saw seeded stars advance into the quarter-finals were these:

Bryan M. Grant, jr., Atlanta, last year's winner and seeded No. 1, defeated J. Carlton Shafer, Philadelphia, 6—3, 6—4, after having some difficulty getting the range of Shafer's swift service.

Charles Harris, West Palm Beach, seeded No. 5, put out Roswell Lee, Miami, 6—3, 7—5, Lee's last set rally not sufficing to stave off Harris' attack.

Arthur Hendrix, Lakeland, Fla., who beat Wilmer Allison at New Orleans Sunday, topped Jack Behr, New York, interscholastic champion, 6—4, 6—3.

Coral Gables, Fla., Jan. 9 (AP).—Lorenzo Nodarse, second ranking Cuban tennis player, was barred from doubles play in the Miami Biltmore tennis tournament this afternoon after the Cuban Amateur Lawn Tennis Federation wrote tournament sponsors he was under suspension.

Coach Bierman Silent On $15,000 Tulane Bid

Minneapolis, Jan. 9 (AP).—Bernie Bierman, Minnesota football coach, tonight flatly refused to discuss a published report that Tulane athletic authorities had offered him a $15,000 a year contract for ten years.

It learned, however, from a source close to the coach, that Tulane still is seeking Bierman and that the Southern institution recently has approached him again.

Bierman came to Minnesota from Tulane in 1932 at a salary of $7,500 a year, following his success with the Green Wave teams from 1927 through 1931.

High-Handed Rulings Are Assailed

Cites 5 Shows Killed by Commission; Burman-Bath Bout Off.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—Bitterly assailing two members of the New York State Athletic Commission, Col. John R. Kilpatrick, president of Madison Square Garden, tonight called off the entire heavyweight show scheduled for tomorrow night.

The commission's refusal to license Hank Bath, California heavy, matched with Red Burman, of Baltimore, in one of the feature bouts, was given as the reason.

Bath, managed by Jack Kearns, former manager of Jack Dempsey, was denied a license with the rather vague announcement that the commission was awaiting "further information" from California.

Raps Phelan, Brown.

In cancelling the entire card, Col. Kilpatrick rapped Chairman John J. Phelan and Commissioner Bill Brown.

"We have been harassed by Phelan and Brown for two years," he said. "They have thrown every obstacle in our path that they could. This ridiculous and high-handed action is the last straw. This is the fifth Garden show they have killed in two years."

Kilpatrick listed the others as the Enzo Fiermonte-Maxie Rosenbloom, Bob Olin and John Henry Lewis, Sammy Fuller and Lou Ambers and Tony Canzoneri and Frankie Klick bouts.

As a result of the latest brush with the commission, the Garden will sharply curtail its winter boxing program. Three boxing dates already have been rented for other attractions and Col. Kilpatrick said he expects to rents others. Five remain.

"Does this mean the Garden is done with boxing?"

"By no means," replied Kilpatrick. "We will continue to stage the outstanding attractions, but until we are assured of closer co-operation from the commission we do not intend to comb the woods for new faces to bring to New York for experimental purposes."

Kilpatrick talked with Chairman Phelan again today and asked that the commission reconsider its action with respect to Bath. Phelan refused, although he admitted the chairman of the California Boxing Commission had telegraphed him both Bath and Kearns are in good standing in California. Phelan hinted this conflicted with previous information.

May Vie in Chicago.

It is likely Bath and Burman will put on their show in Chicago soon. Kilpatrick said Jim Mullen and Nate Lewis, Windy City promoter, would like to stage the match.

Commissioner Brown expressed surprise tonight that the Garden would let two preliminary fighters throw off an entire show.

"If Johnston and Kilpatrick would pay more attention to matchmaking and less to politics they would be more successful," he said. "We have no trouble with the other clubs and we refuse to make the Garden a favorite. We won't play politics. Mike Jacobs comes down to meetings, lays his cards on the table and doesn't have a chip on his shoulder."

Bath was "discovered" recently by Kearns in Colorado. With much ballyhoo, he was launched into his fight career under the Kearns' management, after being dubbed by the former Dempsey manager "a second Manassa Mauler."

Burman is well known to Washington fight fans as Clarence (Red) Burns. As a middleweight, he fought in and near Washington many times before the legalization of boxing in the District. Since coming under the managerial wing of Dempsey, he has been campaigning successfully as a heavyweight, his latest victim being Steve Dudas.

Tris Speaker Appointed.

Cleveland, Jan. 9 (AP).—Tris Speaker, one of baseball's greatest stars and former manager of the Cleveland Indians, was appointed chairman of the Cleveland Boxing Commission by Mayor Harold H. Burton today. Speaker is in the wholesale liquor business here.

The Colonel Shown in Action

Punches by Fitz Sent Rivals Round 'n' Round, Lake Recalls

By Bill McCormick.

THE last scat song had scatted across the footlights. The last strip artiste had removed the last piece of clothing that stood between her and almost complete immodesty and gone home to the husband and kiddies—and we sat on the barren stage of the Gayety burlycue theayter, listening to Col. Jimmy Lake reminisce about old times in the fight racket.

If you think the colonel cannot reminisce authoritatively about old times in the fight racket, you don't know the colonel—nor the fight racket. For the information of those who don't know the background of the Ninth street burlesque impresario and official loudspeaker for sporting events, it may be stated that he has made theatrical tours with Jim Jeffries, Bob Fitzsimmons, Owen Moran, Battling Nelson and Jack Dempsey, besides introducing countless ring celebrities from within the squared circle.

Remembers Big Fight.

"Yes sir, I remember that fight between big Ed Dunkhorst and Bob Fitzsimmons like it was yesterday," the colonel was recalling, spoiling a deep inhalation of nice, clean Gayety air with the smoke from a two-bit stogie. "I wuz just a kid an' I stood in the gallery line at the old Hoicules Club on Moytle avenue in Brooklyn for about an hour for a ticket.

"'Tis Dunkhorst was so big they billed him as the Human Freight Car, an' he certainly looked it, weighin' 365 pounds as he did. Fitz entered the ring with his gloves on—somethin' unusual for those days—as though he was in a hurry to get it over with. Fitz weighed only about 158 pounds and Dunkhorst loomed over him like the Empire State Building over a wigwam.

"Came the first round, and Fitz started shootin' both hands to the big Dutchman, but the harder he'd shoot his hands, the harder they'd bounce off and Roby Robert had got nowhere at all when the bell ended the round.

Fitz Leaves Ring.

"The second round was goin' along about the same when all of a sudden Bob goes into that famous Fitzsimmons shift—you know how it goes: Fitz used to miss on purpose with his right aimed at the chin, then step in with his left to the solar-plexus. Bob's left sunk way down in the big guy's tummy, an' without even looking at him, Fitz stepped over the ropes with those long legs of his and started up the aisle.

"There was Fitz, headed up the aisle and Dunkhorst hadn't even begun to show the effects of the punch, yet—you know it takes several seconds for a solar-plexus wallop to take effect. Bob's seconds went wild, an' so did most of the crowd, thinkin' he had disqualified himself by leavin' the ring. Everybody started a terrible commotion, yellin' to Fitz to come back before he was disqualified.

Was Counted Out.

"Fitz finally heard them and turned towards the ring after he was about half up the aisle. He motioned towards Dunkhorst, who only then was beginnin' to crumple, then started tearin' away again towards the dressin' room. He was probably in his dressin' room taking a shower before the referee finished countin' Dunkhorst out—and believe you me, he was counted out, just as Fitz knew he would be when that punch landed."

A chorus cutie, en route in a hurry from the dressing room to the shower, trotted by garbed only in a shock of red hair, preoccupied look and a towel which was fastened rather insecurely—we hoped—about her waistline. Jimmy blew a nonchalant cloud of smoke in her direction and, without preamble, launched into the next tall tale.

"Once I was playin' in the same troupe with Dempsey, on the last tour Jack made before he won the title," Jimmy admitted. "We hit the Gayety Theater in Scranton, Pa., and were so short on dressing rooms that Jack and I used the same quarters."

Met Henry Muller.

"Jack was doin' the usual business of meetin' some local pride and joy for three rounds every night and the pride and joy elected for that night was one Henry Muller, a Scranton butcher. They were in the dressing room talking things over and Jack was giving Muller a few tips.

"'Lissen, Muller,' he told the butcher, 'we're gonna have a pretty good house out there tonight, so if you kinda take it easy, so will I and we can get together again on Friday night to a bigger house—an' you'll have enough to buy yourself a new butcher shop.'"

"Muller was tickled to death and agreed to just kinda work out with Jack and look good for three rounds. He did it all right in the first round, but in the second, as Jack was clownin' around, he saw a big hole and took one chance on a sucker punch which caught Jack high on the temple and sent him

12 'Favorites' In Coast Golf Tourney

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 9.—The lull before the annual storm of the Los Angeles $5,000 Open golf tournament today found the field of potential winners overcrowded with favorites.

Twelve nationally famous golfers rated the list, which may not be worth the paper it's scrawled on by the time the big bombardment winds up Sunday.

With upward of 125 players slated to tee off tomorrow over the Los Angeles Country Club course, the group includes:

Willie Hunter, Culver City, Calif., runner-up in 1934.

Sam Parks, jr., Pittsburgh, National Open king.

MacDonald Smith, Glendale, winner four of the ten times the Los Angeles Open has been held.

Net Rankings See Sharp Revisions

Allison, Budge, Grant Win First 3 Places for Season.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—In one of the sharpest revisions in many years, the United States Lawn Tennis Association today graded Wilmer Allison, Donald Budge and Bryan (Bitsy) Grant in that order in announcing the Nation's "first 10" stars of 1935.

Allison's designation at the top marks the second straight year the 31-year-old Austin, Tex., player has won the honors and the eighth successive time he has been included on the preferred list.

He retained his position by staggering the dopesters with a straight-set victory over Fred J. Perry, of England, in the penultimate round of the national championship and then walloping Sidney Wood in the final. In 1933 and 1932 he was ranged second; 1931, ninth; 1930, third; 1929, seventh; and 1928, fifth.

Budge, Grant Climb.

The biggest promotions were handed to the red-headed Budge and Grant, the Georgia gnome, who were ranged ninth and tenth respectively in 1934.

The remainder of the makeup of the "first ten" comprises Frank X. Shields, fourth; Sidney Wood, fifth; Gregory Mangin, sixth; Frank Parker, seventh; J. Gilbert Hall, eighth; Wilmer Hines, ninth, and Berkeley Bell, tenth. Bell quit the amateur ranks exactly one month ago and will make his pro debut Saturday night.

As was expected, Champion Helen Hull Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif., was placed at the head of the women's list for the fourth year in a row. The U. S. L. T. A. explained that Mrs. Helen Wills Moody was not ranked "because of insufficient data." Mrs. Moody confined her competitive play to England where she won the Wimbledon title for the seventh time.

Sensation in Tourney.

Budge, a towering California youngster, was the sensation of the All-England championships until he was cut down by Baron Gottfried von Cramm in the semifinal round.

Upon his return, Budge was looked upon as Uncle Sam's best bet to end the reign of Perry as American champion. But he never had an opportunity to match shots with the Briton at Forest Hills because he was eliminated in the quarter-final round by Grant, who in turn was sent to the showers by Wood. Grant achieved many notable triumphs, played with the Davis Cup team in Mexico and successfully defended the National Clay Court Title.

Poor Year for Wood.

Contrasting the rise of Grant and Budge is the demotion of Wood, who was ranked second in 1934. Wood experienced his poorest season since 1931, when he won the Wimbledon title. He went across with the Davis Cuppers but stayed on the sidelines.

Bell was entitled to a ranking because he did not turn professional until after the October 15 deadline.

Mrs. Ethel Burkhardt Arnold, who turned pro last November, was ranked second to Miss Jacobs. The other members of the women's "first ten" are Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, Carolin Babcock, Mrs. John Van Ryn, Gracyn Wheeler, Mary Greef Harris, Mrs. Mary J. Lamme and Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, in that order.

Robert Riggs, of Los Angeles, topped the junior division and the same position was accorded to Isadore Bellis, of Philadelphia, among the boys.

Penn Grid Coach Names Captain Before Games

Philadelphia, Jan. 9 (AP).—The University of Pennsylvania football team decided tonight to have no captain next season, but to have the coach name a captain for each game.

It will be the first season since 1867, with the exception of 1918, that Pennsylvania has had no football captain.

Veteran Hoppe Defeats Cochran, Cue Champ

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Willie Hoppe, veteran New York star, opened his challenge for the world three-cushion billiards title today by defeating Welker Cochran, of San Francisco, owner of the championship, 60 to 41 in 57 innings. Cochran turned in a high run of 7, one better than Hoppe's best cluster.

5,000-Volley Mark Mrs. Moody's Goal

Pairs With Kinsey Today in Freak Record Try.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Jan. 9.—In the face of such comment as "sissy game" and " a sport for softies," Helen Wills Moody and Howard Kinsey went serenely ahead today with plans to try for a new freak record tomorrow for volleying a tennis ball continuously. The goal is 5,000 shots.

Mervyn Griffin, member of a well-known family of tennis playing brothers, declared: "That's a sissy game. Why don't they try something different, such as volleying the ball in the air without touching the ground?"

Griffin said he and partner once had volleyed in the air 1,600 times. To which Kinsey retorted, "My brother, Bob, and I kept the ball in the air for 2,000 consecutive returns once."

Stanford Tackle Sent to Hospital

Ordered to Institution by Court, Worry Blamed.

By the Associated Press

San Jose, Calif., Jan. 9.—Dale Dean Beedle, 20-year-old Stanford tackle, was committed to the Agnew State Hospital today. He helped his alma mater win from Southern Methodist in the Rose Bowl New Year's Day.

The 198-pound, 6 foot 2 inch youth from Miami, Ariz., was sent to the hospital by Superior Judge William F. James.

It was revealed Beedle had been an inmate at Agnew's for two months early in 1934, later entering the Arizona State Hospital.

Officials at Stanford were firm in the belief that no injury sustained in football was responsible for his present condition.

.335 Hitters Due to Come Back This Season; Only Foxx Bettered All-Time Average in '35

(Another of series of 1936 prospects in sport.)

By Alan Gould,

Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—If there's much stock to be taken in major leagues' "law of averages," 1936 should be a big year for the big hitters. Last season was notable for its pitching comebacks, with Lefty Grove, Watson Clark, Ted Lyons and Charley Root among the hurling heroes. It's now up to some of the game's greatest batsmen to show what they can do.

Off-hand, it would appear there's plenty of room for clouting comebacks. Of the seven big league batsmen with lifetime marks in excess of .335 for periods of eight years or more, only one, Jarring Jimmie Foxx, now of the Boston Red Sox, surpassed his previous lifetime record in 1935.

Bill Terry, first baseman and manager of the New York Giants, finished only 2 points below his lifetime batting average, but the remaining five, all former champions, fell off from 16 to 87 points.

It is worth noting that three of the seven, Simmons, Foxx and Manush, have changed uniforms since last season. A fourth, Klein, was on the market, but his comeback in the world series seems to have inspired the former Philadelphia flogger. Latest reports from Klein's Hoosier habitat are that he is no longer bothered by a knee injury and confident of a return to hitting heights in 1936. Chuck dropped below .300 last year for the first time.

Manush, Red Sox	13	.278	.337	—64

The traditional benefits associated with a change of scenery are depended upon to inspire comebacks by Simmons and Manush. Both were startlingly off-form last year, without any apparent alibi. Simmons actually was benched by the White Sox for light hitting, which must have been a shocking embarrassment to the man who led all American League batters in 1930-31 with the Athletics.

Since Simmons was at his best in a championship environment, he may find the congenial company of the world champion Tigers conducive to regaining his batting eye this year, just as the veteran Goose Goslin did after shifting his allegiance from Washington to Detroit. Similarly, Manush, now with a pennant-contender and again taking orders from Joe Cronin, should recover confidence.

Gehrig and Paul Waner did not fall off sufficiently to cause apprehension last year. Both are certain to bid strongly for the batting crowns they wore in 1934. Terry, meanwhile, has abandoned all talk of retirement. As a manager he cannot afford to put a .340 hitter, who also happens to be the league's leading defensive first baseman, on the bench.

Other veterans and impressive life-time marks who fell off in the 1935 batting race included Earl Averill of the Cleveland Indians, who wound up with .288 after a previous average of .321; Freddy Lindstrom, of the Cubs, with .274 against a life-time average of .314; Kiki Cuyler, of the Reds, who dropped to .257 after a previous .331, and Pie Traynor, injured Pirate manager, who skidded from .321 to .279.

Gabby Hartnett, burly backstop of the Cubs, rallied on behalf of the old guard by hitting for .344, an increase of 54 points over his previous life-time mark of .290 for 13 years.

Cooney and Eckhardt, Both 34, And Gill, 29, Rookie Prospects

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—This is the time of year when major league rookies enjoy their greatest glory.

Hundreds of them are brought up each year but few measure up to major league standards. In the National League last season only 12 rookies made the grade. Oddly enough, the Cincinnati Reds, building anew with young blood, had six of them. The Chicago Cubs, National League champions, had two. The Giants, Pirates, Phillies and Cardinals one each.

Scanning the rookies who will try to break into the National League this season, three unusual cases are discovered. They are those of Johnny Cooney and Oscar Eckhardt, a pair of 34-year-old outfielders, who will attempt to make good in the Brooklyn outfield, and Johnny Gill, 29-year-old outfielder, who will bid for a berth with the Cubs.

Cooney broke in with the Braves back in 1920 as a southpaw pitcher, but never achieved any outstanding success. In the minors, he decided to convert himself into an outfielder and last year, in his second season in that role, he batted .374 with Indianapolis to lead the American Association.

During his minor league career, Eckhardt has never batted less than .350. In 1933 he batted .414 for the all-time Coast League record. Last year he hit .392 with the Mission club. He had trials with Detroit and the Boston Braves, but has never played a complete major league game.

Gill, who led the American Association in runs batted in, with 154, has been up before with Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, but always was shunted back to the minors. He hit .361 for Minneapolis last season, and when he joined the Cubs late last season won a game for the champions with a homer.

For those three players—Cooney, Eckhardt and Gill—it will be the last chance. Unless they make good this time, they'll be minor league players for the rest of their playing days.

54 Horses Named In Grand National

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 9.—Maj. Noel Furlong's Reynoldstown, last year's winner, heads a list of 54 horses nominated today for the 1936 running of the Grand National, steeplechase classic which will be run at Aintree March 27. Six American-owned horses were included in the list of entries.

Bagatelle II, Alvin Untermeyer's recently arrived jumper, loomed as most formidable of the American challengers.

The other American-owned thoroughbreds entered were John Hay Whitney's Royal Ransom and Double-Crossed; G. H. (Pete) Bostwick's Castle Irwell, Jesse Metcalfe's Kiltoi and J. B. Snow's Delaneige. Delaneige finished third in the 1934 running of the race.

'Three Blind Mice' Is Name Given to New Rassle Stunt

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—It is with a great deal of pleasure that I find myself able to furnish you with the latest news from Lake Worth, Fla., that flourishing little semitropical community which has grown to wrestling what Winsted, Conn., is to the rest of the Nation for freak stories. The latest idea to come from this center is a match known as the "Three Blind Mice," so called because four blind mice take part in it, apparently. Three blindfolded wrestlers are turned loose in the ring to grope about for one another, and the last one to remain in the ring is adjudged to be the winner.

But just to make it all more binding the fourth man in the ring, the referee is also blindfolded. This brilliant idea found immediate favor I am told and the idea is spreading like wildfire. Mons. Jacques Curley, our local wrestling impresario, was so impressed with it that he is improving on it for the Danno O'Mahoney - Chief Little Wolf match to be staged here shortly. He is going to blindfold the spectators.

ALL of these were in one corner, I believe, opposed to the One Man Gang in the other corner. Or perhaps it was a wrestle-royal, with every man for himself. Whichever it was, it developed that Mr. Adams was what Mr. Billy De Beck would term a trifle too bodacious in his choice of a descriptive nickname.

When the smoke of battle cleared Tiger Long was the last man on his feet. Jack (One Man Gang) Adams was draped over the chandelier, Young Hercules had been thrown into the balcony, Ray Kadish was apparently discovered unconscious in the box office, and King Kong set a new American indoor record for being heaved out of the ring, having been heaved out 37 times when the official comptometer broke.

The draping of Mr. Adams over the ring lights was an unfortunate affair and destroys one of my pet illusions, and certainly one of my favorite heroes. It used to be a sort of a comfort to me who never really had much faith in those motion-picture heroes who battled with whole mobs at a time and emerged triumphant to lie in bed of nights when sleep would not come, and think somewhere in this broad land there was a man who could because he called himself a one man gang.

AND now I find he has succumbed to a mere quartette. You can hardly even call that a gang. Incidentally, local papers please copy. Mr. Adams is a former sailor and comes from Schenectady. Yah, yah! Mr. Adams is a sissy. Couldn't lick four guys. Yah, yah!

Delaney Out, Mader Will Battle Ketchell

AL DELANEY, regarded by many as the outstanding young heavyweight prospect, collapsed in a New York gymnasium yesterday, forcing his withdrawal from a scheduled match with Billy Ketchell at Turner's Arena next Monday night. The mishap reacted to the benefit of local fans, as Delaney's stablemate, Eddie Mader, immediately accepted the berth as substitute against Ketchell.

Delaney's collapse was the result of a severe attack of influenza, from which he emerged too soon to accept a beating at the hands of Steve Dudas in New York. Al was striving desperately to get in shape for his Washington engagement when he went completely to pieces.

Mader generally is ranked next only to Joe Louis as one of the younger title contenders. His recent victories include wins over Tony Galento, who was being built up to a Louis bout; Ford Smith, who scored a knockout over Art Lasky and trounced Buddy Baer; Hank Hankinson, a highly regarded knocker-out from the West, and Al Ettore.

Promoter Joe Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn were highly delighted at the turn of affairs as they have been trying for some time to book Mader, but were unable because of the high guarantee usually demanded for Eddie's services. He commands purses of from $1,000 to $2,000 in New York and refused to come here for less until his manager, Dave Sonnenberg, asked him to substitute for his stable mate, Delaney.

Mader's opponent, Ketchell, is a handsome youngster with an abundant supply of courage and roughness, who is capable of extending any heavyweight. He has showed to great advantage in the heavyweight class, but usually has had difficulty in coping with lighter fighters—those in the light-heavyweight and middleweight divisions, for instance.

There will be no increase in prices for the bout, although, at the prevailing gate scale, Mader's share of the purse will amount to little more than the training expenses he has received for other bouts.

St. John's Rally Downs G. U. Five, 41-27

Brooklyn Team Wins 9th Straight but Trails by 17-16 at Half-Time.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 9.—After outplaying and outscoring the undefeated St. John's University five in the first half, the Georgetown University quintet went down to a 41-to-27 defeat before a capacity crowd in the De Gray Gymnasium here last night. It was the ninth straight victory for the Brooklyn team this season.

The Hoyas, led by Don Gibeau and Tommy Nolan, started with a rush and took the lead shortly after the start. Running seven straight points, Georgetown took an 11-to-4 lead midway in the first half before St. John's was able to really get started.

The Brooklyn team rallied with seven minutes of the half remaining to tie the score at 12-all, but again Georgetown went into the lead when Johnny Frank and Ben Zola scored from the floor to make the score, 17 to 14.

G. U. Ahead at Half.

St. John's made three points in the last minute of the half, leaving Georgetown only a point ahead at the intermission, 17 to 16. It was the first time this season that St. John's had trailed at half-time.

St. John's played a fine game of basketball in the second half, starting with an eight-point streak to make the score 24 to 17 and then running 10 straight points after the Hoyas had pulled up to 24 to 21. The Georgetown defense broke down under the fast-passing St. John's attack in this half.

Tommy Nolan was the high scorer for Georgetown with eight points, while Zola and Gibeau each contributed five points. Jerry Bush, St. John's sophomore, was the individual high scorer with 16 points.

Rinaldi to Oppose Democratic Club

Rinaldi Tailors will attempt to alter the record Sunday when they hook up with the Stonewall Democratic Club tossers, of Baltimore, at 3 o'clock on the George Washington University court.

It will be their second meeting, Stonewall winning the first game, which was played in Washington, by a 24-to-20 count, in a whirlwind battle. The invaders reputedly have been strengthened by the addition of Jack Snyder, 210-pound center, who is rated as the Monumental City's best all-around courtman.

A preliminary game has been arranged between Resettlement, which boasts the presence of Bob Freeman at center, and the McFarland Young Men's Club. The first game is scheduled for 2 o'clock and the feature an hour later.

Flynn Ties for Lead In Billiard Tourney

Gene Flynn advanced into a tie for first place in the District three-cushion billiard championships last night at the Royal Recreation Billiard parlors by turning back Howard Baer, 34 to 31, in 64 innings. It was Flynn's fourth victory in five starts and tied him for the lead with Bill Hokie.

Frank Massi defeated John Dodge, 35 to 34, in 73 innings in the other match of the night. In tonight's matches, Curtis Lampson will meet Gene Ruark and Charlie Goodacre will face Everett Crouch.

Roosevelt Captain.

Francis Beamer, veteran Roosevelt High School athlete, has been elected captain of the Rough Rider basketball team. Spiro Kolius, high-scoring forward, was elected to succeed Beamer when the big center is graduated in February. Beamer and Kolius were co-captains of the football team.

Red Scheible May Be Lost For Game

Western and Roosevelt Also to Start Race for Crown.

AN odds-on favorite to beat the field, Eastern High opens defense of its inter-high basketball championship this afternoon, facing the threefold inconvenience of a scrappy Tech team, probable absence of its All-High guard, Red Scheible, and certain danger of an over-confidence complex.

While Eastern is meeting these difficulties at the Tech gymnasium, Western High and Roosevelt will be staging the other half of the opening program of the series at Roosevelt High. Both games start at 3:30 p. m.

Scheible, red-headed pot-shot artist, has been ordered to appear in his uniform, but probably will be adorning the bench when the game starts. The gallavantin' guard's broken finger, suffered in a football game, is still not completely normal, but if Tech is matching Eastern point for point in the last quarter it would not be surprising to see him sent into action. He has worked out but once this week. Though shooting baskets without much difficulty he did not scrimmage.

Silverman Is Out.

Roosevelt likewise will open its series drive without one of its stars, Harry Silverman, who severely wrenched his shoulder against Bethesda-Chevy Chase early this week. The clavicle was pushed out of place and ligaments torn. Coach Herman Littman will not use his sharp-shooting forward for two weeks. Francis Coakley, member of Littman's other "first team," will start in Silverman's place.

Filling in for Scheible will be the able Chick Colley, a much-taller man than Scheible and vastly improved from last year. Capt. Dope Dean will pair with him at guard, with Buddy Shaner at center and Chick Hollidge and Bill Bucholtz at the forward posts.

Wins 8 of 9 Games.

Eastern has won 8 of the 9 games it has played, Tech 3 of its 7. Both lost to the George Washington Freshmen, Eastern, 38 to 20; Tech, 33 to 15. Tech beat Gonzaga, 19 to 10, coasting to victory. Eastern has beaten Gonzaga, 38 to 19, and 40 to 13. Tech has listed the Catholic University Freshmen among its victims. It has received no defeat as complete as Eastern's by the Colonial Freshmen.

Western and Eastern rate as the day's winners. Central, rated as Eastern's big threat to the title, does not open its series until Tuesday when it meets Tech. Eastern, Central, Tech, Western and Roosevelt figure to rate in about that order at the finish.

Cards Try New Idea, to Build Coast Farm From Sandlots

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 9.—Branch Rickey exploded a baseball bombshell tonight by announcing he would build the Sacramento team in the Coast League, newest link in the St. Louis Cardinal chain, with players recruited from California's semiprofessional and amateur diamond ranks.

Baseball experts here regarded the plan as a sensational innovation in view of the fact the Coast League is one of the three leading circuits in the minors.

The Cardinal field general said a training camp would be opened February 1 for the rookies. William Walsingham, jr., member of the Cardinal organization, and Scout Joe Schultz will leave for the Coast tomorrow to round up aspirants.

They will be faced with the task of building a completely new club, for every player on the 1935 roster was sold before the Cardinals purchased the Sacramento franchise.

"This, of course, is a far departure from anything that has ever been undertaken in baseball," Rickey said, "but I know there are enough talented young players on the coast to build a good class AA team, and it's our job to find them."

Guyon Finds Self in Minority, Is Only Coach Believing His Eastern Team Will Win Title

THOMPSON (Tech) — RAY (Central) — LITTMAN (Roosevelt) — MOORE (Western) — GUYON (Eastern)

(Last of a series of six stories on the prospects of the teams in the inter-high basketball series opening today.)

By John R. Vosburgh.

OF the five coaches whose teams will scramble for the inter-high basketball championship, Coach Charlie Guyon, of Eastern, is in a distinct minority of one. Mr. Guyon has made the prediction that Eastern will win the championship. None of the other four coaches think so, despite Eastern's obvious superiority—on paper.

Coach Jack Ray sees his Central team and Eastern fighting it out for the title. Coach Cliff Moore, of Western, thinks anything might happen to Eastern, "according to the way Central is going." Coach Rusty Thompson, of Tech, thinks "Eastern can be beat." Coach Herman Littman, of Roosevelt, is "not conceding Eastern or any other team anything."

In the confident Guyon, however, the other coaches are up against a prophet of some reputation. Last year, the chief crossed most observers by predicting Eastern would win the championship, although Tech was the logical favorite. With only one veteran returning in baseball last spring, he predicted Eastern would still win the championship, which it subsequently did.

The coaches express themselves as follows:

Coach Guyon—"We'll win."

Coach Ray—"Central is 15 points stronger than it was last year, though we only have two men back from last season's team. Losing Sam Fox and Sid Gerstenfeld has been pretty tough, but they'll probably be eligible for the last three games, including one with Eastern. Eastern and Central will battle it out for the championship. Tech will be a pretty dangerous dark-horse."

Coach Moore—"I kind of look forward to some team beating Eastern. Even the best teams have their bad days. According to the way Central is going, anything might happen. Somebody may upset the applecart; it's been done before."

Coach Thompson—"I don't know how the boys will end up in the series, but we play to win and not just for fun. We scrimmaged the Georgetown Freshmen yesterday and looked good. The boys think they have as much chance to win as Eastern. Take it from me, Eastern will have its hand full. Central looked strong down in Richmond."

Coach Littmann — "I expect Roosevelt to finish higher than it did last year. We're not conceding any team in the series anything."

Punch by Fitz Was a Punch, Lake Says

reelin'. Jack reeled away from Muller, who was tryin' awfully hard to put over the finisher, until the bell ended the round.

"Jack tore out for the third round just like he did against Willard, pinned Muller into a corner and let loose a terrific left uppercut. It caught Henry right smack on the chin and he sailed clean over the top rope—clean over without even touchin' the rope—into a crowd of standees that was clustered in the wings.

"That was the last the audience out front ever saw of Muller. He was knocked completely out of sight and was counted out where they couldn't see him. They couldda counted to a million, in fact they had to take him to a hospital and he didn't come to until the next day. I guess that's the first time a fighter was knocked completely out of sight."

"This John Lester Johnson, a pretty good colored heavyweight, was matched to fight old Sam Langford," he advised, flipping a cigar ash into our outstretched ear. "They came to Sam and asked him to carry Johnson, as he wasn't in old Sam's class. Old Sam agreed and everything was going all right until the third round, when Johnson clipped Langford a sucker punch that had him out on his feet. Sam managed somehow to weather the round, but how I'll never know."

"They worked mighty hard on Sam between rounds and he answered the bell for the fourth in good shape. As he trotted out, he stuck out his hand to shake with Johnson. 'Sam, this ain't the last round,' Johnson insisted. 'Oh yes it is for you, black boy,' old Sam replied and with that he lets go a right that knocks John Lester Johnson as cold as a heated taxicab in a blizzard."

"Then there was the time Tom O'Rourke signed Jack Downey up for a big fight and came to him with the news. 'Jack, I got you a great fight,' he said. 'How much I get?' was the first thing Downey wanted to know. 'One thousand dollars,' O'Rourke informed him proudly.

"'Ha,' snorted Downey, 'You're supposed to be a big time manager an' signin' me to fight for a thousand dollars. I won't do it. I won't fight for a cent less ten hundred.'

"Then there was the time I had Bat Nelson booked and he got in an argument with the Maori-Australian strong man we had in the troupe . . ."

But we never heard the rest of that story. The chorus cutie trotted past again just at that moment—and the towel fell off.

Evans Asserts Heurich Pros Underpaid

By Lewis F. Atchison.

WHAT is, apparently, the final chapter in the dispute between Chris Heurich and three members of the pro basketball team bearing his name has been penned by William W. (Moon) Evans, one of the trio who quit in protest against the meager financial remuneration for their work. Bucky Buscher, who like Evans is an alumnus of the University of Maryland, and Joe Croson, former Duke University star, quit with Evans.

In a letter to this reporter, written to clarify the record, Evans charges that Heurich exploited the team, was guilty of mismanagement, and closes with a denial that the three were dropped or banished. They quit, he says, when Heurich refused to guarantee the players not employed in his brewery a certain sum for playing. But let Evans speak, or rather write, for himself.

$12 For Five Games.

"Here is the true situation. The players received, prior to the Celtic games, the staggering amount of $12 for five games; $4 for one, $2 for another, $5 for another, and $1 for another, and not one cent for one Sunday game. Consider that they practiced at least two nights a week and you figure out if playing for the Brewery didn't cost the players money instead of them making money as many suppose.

"Further, to endeavor to make a little, no passes were allowed the players (this being their own choice) so if they brought a girl or friend there was more expense.

"We made some money on the Celtic games, though, of course, not comparable to the amount received by the Celtic players. After these two games the three players felt the situation would remain the same as it was prior to the visit of the Celtics and that they would continue to pay for the privilege of playing with the Brewery team."

Meanwhile the Heurich Club finds itself in a sad plight for men to play Sunday's game with the Pittsburgh Willigs. Efforts have been made to obtain Arthur Zahn, a member of the Fredericksburg Fleetwings, and Bill Noonan, now with the Rinaldi Tailors. Zahn has not replied to his offer and Noonan is unwilling to play unless paid on a straight salary basis.

Wilson Teachers Down Lynchburg

The Wilson Teachers College avenged an early season defeat at the hands of Lynchburg College tonight by downing the Virginians, 36-33, at Wilson gym. Led by Bill Mitchell's scoring, the Teachers moved into the lead at once and clung to some sort of an advantage throughout the game. At half-time the score was 20-17.

Werksman and Fox were strong cogs in the Wilson machine. The visitors used nine players, and the bulk of their scoring was done by Saunder and Phipps. Lynchburg missed the services of Cipelot, the star of the 43-29 victory over Wilson in their first meeting. The star player could not make the trip due to the death of his father.

C. U.'s Ringmen To Taper Off For Opener

WITH the squad rounding into fighting trim under the unrelenting drive of Coach Eddie LaFond, Catholic University's ringmen will occupy their time this afternoon tapering off in preparation for tomorrow's curtain-raiser against North Carolina State at Brookland.

LaFond is pinning his hope for victory on the men fighting in the heavier classes. From 145 pounds up, with one exception, he figures the Cardinal clouters will match anything the Wolfpack has. The lone exception is Jack Connors, 165-pounder, who has never fought before. He looks promising, but inexperience may count too heavily against him.

Bigger and Stronger.

After spending the summer working with Sammy Mandell and applying himself diligently since returning to school, Mix looks like he can go with the best of them. He is bigger and stronger and has accumulated a store of tricks from the cagey Mandell.

Rydzewski, the lad who outpointed Tom Pontecarvo, Western Maryland heavy, in one of last season's most surprising upsets, has been boxing well, and Grecco, a consistent winner, appears to have lost none of the old touch. It is a new business for both Schuldenski and Katalinas, but both are willing, rugged and capable with their hands.

Petro Beats Roddill In Boys Feature Bout

125-pound class—Ray Nally won decision from Jimmy Dimisa.
60-pound class—Herbert Long won decision

Great Haste Is Second in Feature

Jockey Malley Puts Up Fine Ride as Gelding Scores in Duel.

By the Associated Press.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., Jan. 9.—Laughing Sun, in the blue and orange silks of Mrs. W. Plunkett Stewart, New York socialite, won the featured Aucilla Purse of 6 furlongs by the tip of his nose here today. Great Haste, representing Miss A. Doris, was the loser in a bitterly fought stretch drive, with the Wheatley Stable's Bellum a length behind the pair. Col. Ed and Warren, jr., completed the small field as named.

Laughing Sun paid $5.10. He was a slight choice over Great Haste, which, had it won, would have paid 5 cents more on the dollar. Tommy Malley, veteran of about seven years in the saddle, put up one of his best rides on Laughing Sun to get the gelded son of Sun Edwin home in 1:11 flat.

Close Race All Way.

It was anybody's race virtually all the way. Warren Jr. led the field for the first quarter, with Bellum and Laughing Sun close behind. Jimmy Stout shot Great Haste up around the far turn and the gelding stuck his head in front of Laughing Sun entering the home lane, with Bellum unable to keep up under Kopel's whip. The favorite, on the inside, finished gamely under Malley's strong hand ride and got the nod over Great Haste in the final few strides.

Relativity took the next-to-closing number by four lengths, giving favorites five triumphs in six races. Attending Ukraine's pace closely to the far turn, Relativity then began her victorious charge and swept into a wide advantage without being extended. The mare returned $5. Ukraine saved the runner-up position by a length and a half from Dark Mission.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOUNT ECHO, $7.20, $4.40, $2.80; JACKFULL, $5.10, $2.60; INFLAME, $2.30.

MOUNT ECHO worked his way up, was taken to the outside in stretch, closed fast and was drawing away at end. JACKFULL displayed keen speed and held on gamely. INFLAME broke fast as usual, moved up with a determined bid around turn, but faltered badly at end. JOHNNY TIGHT closed a big gap. LIEUT. GREENOCK stopped badly.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $600; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:04. Off at 3:08. Winner, Mrs. W. E. Martin's b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GRANNYS TRADE, $3.60, $2.70, $2.20; DARK WAR, $5.40, $3.30; L. B. WILSON, $2.80.

GRANNYS TRADE ran as if much the best. She raced DARK WAR into defeat in first half mile, drew away and won nicely in hand. DARK WAR showed good speed and made a game effort. L. B. WILSON saved ground on turn, but was not good enough. BROAD MEADOWS closed very fast. NIGHT SERGE is sure to improve.

DAILY DOUBLE (FIRST AND THIRD RACES) PAID $16.60.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700. The Aucilla. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:36. Off at 3:37. Winner, Mrs. W. Plunkett Stewart's ch. f. (4), by Sun Edwin—Laughing Lady. Trained by G. M. Odom. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:11.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LAUGHING SUN, $5.10, $2.50, $2.20; GREAT HASTE, $2.70, $2.30; BELLUM, $2.70.

LAUGHING SUN ran a smart race. He was kept on inside for entire trip and stood long drive gamely. GREAT HASTE moved up fast around turn, was driven hard and held on gamely. BELLUM was pinched back turning out of back stretch, was taken to the outside and was wearing the leaders down. COLONEL ED could not keep up in early part. WARREN JR. had plenty of speed for three furlongs.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:04. Off at 4:07. Winner, A. G. Tarn's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WHIPPER CRACKER, $4.30, $3.30, $2.50; BLACK FALCON, $9.30, $4.30; TAUNTON, $3.20.

WHIPPER CRACKER had to be much the best. He broke good, but was crowded back at the start. He was taken to the far turn, where he moved up with a rush, took lead, but had to be ridden hard to win. BLACK FALCON raced gamely. SHEPHERD BOY into defeat and stood long drive gamely. TAUNTON made his move entering stretch, but could not get up. SEAWICK finished very fast. JODA had no mishap.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:35. Off at 4:36½. Winner, E. Craigie's blk. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RELATIVITY, $5.00, $2.90, $2.40; UKRAINE, $3.30, $2.60; DARK MISSION, $2.50.

RELATIVITY was much the best. She followed pace closely to the far turn, where she ran into lead, drew away and won under restrained. UKRAINE was rushed into lead, displayed good speed, but tired and was lucky to be second. DARK MISSION finished with a rush. TOMPOOLERY ran a fair race.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $600; claiming. For fillies and mares, 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 5:10. Off at 5:10½. Winner, E. Craigie's ch. f. Palatial Oval Will Have Accommodations for 65,000 Fans.

AN army of workmen is awaiting the word of Congress to converge on the historic Benning Race Track, beloved rendezvous of sportsmen of the 'nineties, and erect the most practical, if not the most beautiful, turf plant in the Nation. The ultra modern plant will occupy 150 acres of ground set in the heart of the new park system now planned for the banks of the Anacostia River by the Federal Government.

Only a 15-minute drive from the downtown section, the track will be equipped with every facility for the reception and comfort of 65,000 visitors. The new track will be served by broad four-lane boulevards, two trunk-line railroads, street cars and buses that set down their passengers at the track gates. Eleven hundred thoroughbreds can be housed in the spacious stabling area, while the auto parks within the track gates will afford accommodation for 10,000 vehicles.

18-Horse Field.

A regulation 1-mile racing oval will be equipped with chutes at the quarter-mile and 6-furlong poles and will accommodate an 18-horse field. A standard steeplechase course will be constructed in the infield. Thousands of trees, shrubs and flower beds will achieve the charm and decorative effects.

In the above drawing, made by Mark Linenthal, the Boston engineer who drew the plans for the Narragansett Park track, the proposed Benning plant reveals a pretentious racing establishment. At the extreme left is the stabling area with the administration building near the roadway. The grandstand, which will seat 45,000, can not be mistaken. In the rear is the paddock, and at the right is the clubhouse. The building at the extreme right is the Saddle Club. Two of the many parking areas are shown. The protrusions of the track at the left and right are the mile and a quarter and the 6-furlong chutes.

Local Boxing Body Copied in New York

Five innovations adopted by the District Boxing Commission when mitigated mayhem was made lawful here, have since been adopted by the New York State athletic commission, which controls the sport in the Empire State.

After the Steve Hamas-Art Lasky decision in New York, which did not please the fans at all, the New York commission adopted the five-point scoring system, which has been used successfully there since then.

Gen. Phelan, chairman of the New York commission, was a spectator at the Canzoneri-Klick bout at Griffith Stadium last summer and liked the idea of the little corner canvases required here. He took the idea to New York, where it has been used successfully. Florida and Illinois later adopted the innovation.

The New York commission recently adopted the District regulation limiting the number of passes to be issued for any one show and now, after the Hank Bath business, they have forbidden publicity on bouts until a permit is granted and contracts are in the hands of the commission. This has been the rule here since the legalization of boxing.

Three Games Tonight In Heurich Cup Series

Tropical Park, Jan. 9.

Dear Al:

There will be a battle over the apprentice rule when the National Association of Racing Commissioners meets here next week. Understand that an effort will be made to confine the apprentice allowance to three pounds for riders who take mounts other than those of their contract stable. Under the plan, the contract stable would get the current 5-pound allowance. In addition, the contract stable would get the benefit of a 3-pound allowance for a period of one year following the expiration of the boy's apprenticeship. I can smell the big stables as the instigators of the move in an attempt to squeeze out the small horsemen. Many of the cheaper stables gather purses only because they take advantage of the present 5-pound allowance and put up the reigning apprentice sensation. If the rules are changed to conform with the plan, the small stable, unable to hire or develop a good apprentice, will have to spot the larger stables two pounds in every race where apprentice riders are in the saddle. The Bennings forces had three winners and three seconds in seven tries today. We were beaten a head, a nose and a length. BILL.

First race—Cicary goes back to a short spring after failing at a mile. Seems suited by conditions and the company and I see no reason for mistakes. Johnny Cake and Brother Newt seem capable of holding safe.

Second race—Oddesa Girl will have the services of Arcaro in the saddle and she seems to have a class edge on her opposition. Tap On comes from a barn of fit horses and is dangerous. Cathy gets a slight shift in the weights and should be a factor.

Fourth race—I'm going to take Venetian, recent stake winner. His late starting habit should make him a fair price here and he has the punch to get home, even at the sprint route. Lord Tournament and Belle Grier to take care of the others.

Fifth race—Quel Jeu has been working well and if tomorrow is the selected day, this one will come sailing home. Below Zero, with only 100 pounds to carry, will be the one to beat. Scotch Gold to show.

Sixth race—Miss Bam and Major Greenock should battle it out for the chief award here. Both are fit and ready. Bombastic, assigned only 98 pounds, is a possible surprise.

Eighth race—Drusus comes off a fast-closing sprint that indicates a victory is not far in the future. Crowned Head and Darkling to fight it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Dollar Abroad Hit by Rumor Of Devaluation

Morgenthau Advises Not to Worry Over Reports of Foreign Origin.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 9.—International dollar rates churned around at a feverish pace today following rumors abroad, and official denial in Washington, that further devaluation of the American dollar was in prospect.

The British pound sterling, French francs and Holland guilders were conspicuously strong in New York during early trading, but lost a portion of the advances when Secretary Morgenthau brushed aside any devaluation talk as fiction.

After a slight rally following a weak opening, the dollar eased further in London and closed at 4.95⅛, a net loss of 1⅛ cents. The French franc also was strong at the expense of the dollar, closing at 6.62 cents, compared with 6.59¾ yesterday.

Private cable advices from abroad, according to Dow-Jones & Co., indicated the telegram sent yesterday by the Committee for the Nation urging President Roosevelt to devalue the dollar immediately by raising the price of gold to $41 an ounce was the direct cause for the drop in the dollar.

Secretary Morgenthau brushed aside reports from London that rumors of further devaluation to offset AAA's collapse had caused the weakness of the dollar in relation to the pound.

"I would not worry too much about rumors right now," he told his press conference yesterday, "especially if they originate outside the United States. Someone always loses money."

Nash Reports Deficit, Declares Dividend

Kenosha, Wis., Jan. 9 (AP).—The board of directors of Nash Motors Co., voted today a dividend of 25 cents a share on common stock, payable February 1 to stockholders of record January 18.

The balance sheet for the fiscal year ended November 30 showed a loss of $610,225.40 after deducting all expenses, reserves, depreciation, and taxes. The report showed dividend disbursements in cash totaling $2,730,000 and a charge of $647,102.17 to depreciation, and a balance of $24,520,514.31 in cash and United States Government securities.

Cotton Futures Touch New Lows

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 9.—Cotton broke severely today to new low ground for the movement under general selling or liquidation attributed to continued nervousness over the Supreme Court decision.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil trading was of record proportions today with prices easier under renewed liquidation and selling, promoted by the easiness of cotton and lard. Final prices were several points above the lowest, but still 12 to 22 points net lower. Sales were 353 contracts. Bleachable, spot nominal; January closed 9.78; March, 9.94; May, 9.91; July, 9.94.

New Orleans, Jan. 9 (AP).—Cotton sold under 10 cents a pound on the New Orleans cotton market today for the first time since December, 1933.

In a further reaction to the Supreme Court decision on Monday, which outlawed the AAA, the value of the South's great staple slipped to 9.73 cents and 9.78 cents a pound for new crop months.

U. S. Gold Output Sets Record for Value

By the Associated Press.

The Bureau of Mines announced yesterday that 1935 domestic gold production reached an all-time dollar value of $124,115,915.

This figure, calculated at $35 an ounce, did not set a new quantitive high, however. But 3,546,189 ounces were produced compared with the record of 4,887,604 ounces in 1915 when gold was valued at $20.67 an ounce. The 1934 production was 3,091,183 ounces.

Reserve Funds $158,000,000 More in Week

Total of 5.745 Billions Is 3 Billions Over Legal Needs.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported last night that member bank reserve balances shot up abruptly $158,000,000 during the week ended January 8. This brought the total to $5,745,000,000, an amount approximately $3,000,000,000 in excess of legal requirements.

A return of $89,000,000 of money in circulation, and the re-transfer of $58,000,000 of Treasury deposits and cash with Federal Reserve banks accounted for the upswing.

The inflow of gold resumed more normal proportions during the week, which saw net imports of $21,000,000, to bring total stocks to $10,144,000,000. That was $1,886,000,000 in excess of the amount held at this time last year. The condition statement said:

"The daily average volume of Federal Reserve bank credit outstanding during the week ended January 8, as reported by the Federal Reserve banks, was $2,480,000,000, a decrease of $8,000,000, compared with the preceding week and an increase of $16,000,000, compared with the corresponding week in 1935.

"On January 8 a total Reserve bank credie amounted to $2,476,000,000, a decrease of $10,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with decreases of $99,000,000 in money in circulation, $58,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks and an increase of $21,000,000 in monetary gold stock, offset in part by increases of $158,000,000 in member bank reserve balances and $10,000,000 in non-member deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts. Member bank reserve balances on January 8 were estimated to be approximately $3,000,000,000 in excess of legal requirements."

Price Advance Posted On Finished Copper

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—The American Brass Co. today announced an advance of ¼ to ½-cent a pound in the price of certain types of tubes and sheet copper, effective January 13. The quotation on seamless tubes, brass and copper pipe, sheet copper in rolls and economy strip was raised ¼ of a cent a pound. Copper water tubes was advanced ½-cent a pound.

The increases, company officials said, were due to somewhat higher fabricating costs. The Revere Copper & Brass Co. later met the advance by posting similar quotations for the various specifications.

Stocks Run Into Late Profit-Taking in Active Trading; Dollar Drops on Inflation Talk.

New York, Jan. 9.—After further progress in the morning trading, with the ticker behind-hand at times, the share market ran into some profit taking in the last hour which wiped out gains in most of the industrial groups, but which brought no heavy dumping of securities. For the first time this week the turnover failed to exceed 3,000,000 shares. The list again was an unusually broad one. Treasury bonds improved. Wheat continued its decline. May futures dropped ⅝ of a cent to 101¼ cents a bushel.

Creeping in as a fog, the wraith of inflation drifted over the market. It was not disconcerting enough to cause any great change in security or commodity markets, but it was sufficiently noticeable to cause a good deal of talk and to give a fillip to the gold mining stocks. Abroad the rumor that President Roosevelt would exercise his authority under the law to increase further the price of gold, i. e., to $41 an ounce, or double the price at which gold was valued in terms of dollars for generations, stirred up more excitement. It brought strong advances in sterling and in the gold currencies, probably mostly of a speculative nature.

Inflation Again.

Bankers with European connections reported that in some measure the concern over the dollar felt abroad grew from a misunderstanding of the nature of an American organization known as the Committee for the Nation. That committee yesterday proposed a further devaluation of the dollar, and some Europeans were said to have believed that the proposal came from an official source. They can't be blamed for mixing up the CN with the TNT and other alphabetical combinations, but at home it ought to be appreciated that the committee is wholly an unofficial association of inflationists, trying their best to put the dollar down and upset confidence in the currency, on the mistaken idea that such action will aid trade. Debts, it is true, might thereby become less burdensome.

Just now, at least, the supposition that dollars will be further depreciated by Presidential order, in terms of gold, rests on two developments; one, the overthrow of the agricultural adjustment act's processing taxes; the other, preparations by Congress for the voting of a soldiers' bonus, without benefit of new taxation. As the executive and the Congress busy themselves with ways and means for continuing the unsound practice of curtailing farm production and paying farm bonuses and doles, the good effects of the Supreme Court decision grow a little thinner. It is recognized that if payments are continued a new inflationary force will have been loosed, for the money will be obtained in the usual way, that is to say, borrowing.

More Bootstrap Works.

Piling up the public debt for the benefit of a class, or even the whole country, brings nearer the day of reckoning, which has inflation for its twilight, whether preceded or accomplished by heavier taxation. The bonus also, in its spending, will have an inflationary effect; and in its payment the result is likely to be disturbing to currency and credit. Meanwhile those who wish and urge depreciated dollars mischievously suggest that now is the time to put up the price of gold in dollar terms and use the so-called "profit" from the marking up of value on the Treasury books to meet Federal obligations.

The high reached by sterling in foreign markets was the equivalent of $4.96, while the franc abroad reached the dollar equivalent of 6.63 cents. After Secretary Morgenthau had deprecated reports of further dollar devaluation the market for dollars was better, and at no time was there evidence of support of an official nature, except some application of the brakes upon sterling by the ever-watchful British equalization fund. By afternoon the foreign exchange market was fairly well soothed, foreign speculators trying to take in short contracts in dollars without paying too high a price for them.

Brokers' Loans.

Following precedent the market this week should report a reduction in brokers' loans. Last week the figure rose sharply, in connection with year-end financing and borrowing to anticipate dividend and interest payments. The course of prices and trading activity point to rising loans, but the other factor should more than offset that. The real rush of the public to buy stocks on margin is likely to take place when an inflationary bonus scheme goes through Congress, when the farm doles are continued by means of a direct charge upon the Treasury, and when the gold price is lifted—when, as, and if.

Commercial Solvents.

Until recently Commercial Solvents took little part in the bull market of the summer and autumn. Stockholders had to gnash their teeth while other stocks swept by. This morning activity in Solvents elbowed everything else to the side of the road and the stock was brought up to a new high price. For one thing, apparently, the end of processing taxes is calculated to help the company, which is a large user of cane and corn.

Slow Pay.

Uncle Sam is a hard bill collector, and an equally difficult person to deal with when he is on the paying end. One Wall Street man, called to Washington last November to confer with SEC on certain financial reorganizations, had supposed it would be easy enough to collect his expenses for railroad fare and hotel bills, to say nothing of the usual $3 per diem. He is still trying, and wonders if others have had the same trouble.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

From the middle of the forenoon into midafternoon an enormous amount of the ticker tape was used in recoring transactions in R-K-O. The stock came out in thousand share lots and, measured by percentage, rose sharply. Approach of the season for a recapitalization of Radio Corporation, helped along by liquidation of the corporation's holdings in R-K-O and EMI, directed attention to the possibilities in R-K-O. It was stated at the time of the transfer of Radio's holdings of R-K-O to investment trust portfolios that the matter would hasten reorganization. R-K-O was placed by the courts into receivership in January, 1933.

Big Four.

In the first sale since August 1, 1933, ten shares of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis—Big Four to most people—changed hands at 156½. The last previous sale brought 140. Since that time 20 points in dividends have been paid. The road is operated under lease to the New York Central, which owns all but 7,425 shares of the common stock.

B. I. S.

At the Bankers Trust meeting today a stockholder pointed to an item which was listed as "stocks of the Federal Reserve Bank and Bank for International Settlements" carried at $2,280,000 and asked what kind of an asset the Bank for International Settlements was. The shareholder lost further interest in the item when it was disclosed that the B. I. S. stock was only $30,000 of the total.

Publicity.

The silliness sweepstakes (for today only) was won by Senator McKellar in defending publicity for salaries on the ground that if salaries are not made public "a corporation could avoid taxes by paying out large salaries or bonuses for deduction purposes." If the Senator knew the difference between the tax on corporate profits and the surtax rates on individual incomes he would not worry about the evasion of corporate income taxes.

Bank Clearings Up 32.6% Here 25% in Nation

Total for Week of Jan. 8 in 22 Leading Cities Is 6.7 Billions.

The Washington Clearing House reports total clearings of $23,279,275.89 for the week ended January 8, which compares with a total of $17,486,487.87 for the same period last year, an increase of 32.5 per cent, which is substantially better than the average gain of 25 per cent reported by 22 leading cities. Compared with the total of $14,491,117.76 for the week ended December 31, clearings increased 60.6 per cent.

New York, January 9 (AP).—Bank clearings for the first week of January made the best exhibit of any week back to December 17, 1931, with the single exception of that ended July 3, 1935. First-of-the-year payments were included in the week both this year and last. These helped materially in swelling the totals.

The total of bank clearings for the 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday, January 8, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $6,720,940,000, compared with $5,376,420,000 a year ago, an increase of 25 per cent. For the week preceding, the gain was only 6 per cent in the same comparison. New York City clearings totaled $4,427,977,800, a rise of 23.8 per cent over the corresponding period in 1935, while the aggregate for cities outside of New York was $2,292,863,000, or 27.4 per cent higher.

Figures at leading centers, showing increases as compared with those of a year ago, are printed herewith, also daily bank clearings for October, November and December, 1935, and the first week of January.

Stop Loss Sales Depress Wheat

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Stop-loss selling on the part of holders of May delivery contracts gave a downward swing to all wheat values today. Predictions were current that the United States would have a more liberal carryover of breadstuff supplies July 1 than has been generally expected of late, and this did a good deal to tumble May quotations.

Wheat closed unsettled at nearly the day's bottom level, ¼@1⅛ under yesterday's finish, May, 101⅛@101¼; corn, ¼@½ down, May, 60⅞@61; oats also ¼@½ off, and provisions showing 10 to 27 cents drop.

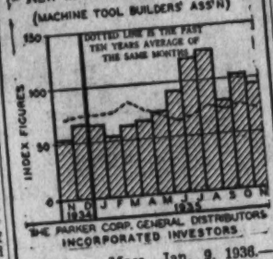
Machine Tool Orders Indicate Activity



Boston, Mass., Jan. 9, 1936.—An index of future activity in the durable industries is the volume of machine tool orders. New machine tool orders in November were 79 per cent greater than a year ago. In the first 11 months of 1935 orders went ahead of the same 1934 months by 91 per cent.

Steel Wages Need Tariff, Irvin Holds

U. S. Steel Corp. Head Also Asks Halt in New Legislation.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—A plea for a halt in regulatory legislation until the country has adjusted itself to those laws already passed, and a hint that wages of steel workers could not be maintained without the benefit of a protectie tariff, was voiced today by W. A. Irvin, president of the United States Steel Corporation.

In a speech before the Union League Club, he said that if the United States is to remain a great Nation, "we must not only continue the efficiency of our iron and steel industry, but permit it the opportunity to maintain, if not the leadership of the past, at least an equal opportunity with the rest of the world in its forward development and improvement in processes and quality." He added:

"Legislation inimical to a satisfactory relationship between stockholders, management and workers, is not only working against these three groups, but against the welfare of the whole people.

Asks Time for Digestion.

"May I express the earnest hope that the governing powers of this Nation will see the wisdom of subjecting business at this time to no further regulatory legislation, at least until the country has had time to digest the great mass of new legislation and regulation which is hardly yet effective.

"It is difficult to proceed with business in an orderly manner when we are faced with continuing uncertainties of new situations confronting us, and their effects upon costs and revenues."

Discussing the new reciprocal trade agreement act, Irvin said that the market for steel was being unsettled by the downward revision of the tariff on many manufactured products, forcing American steel to compete with foreign products produced by labor paid less than one-half that paid in this country.

"If we are to continue paying high wage rates as compared with our foreign competitors," he said, "our workmen must have the benefit of a protective tariff. I am for wage rates and earnings as high as business can afford to pay and I should deplore any downward revision of wages necessitated by reason of excessive importations.

OFFICIAL NOTICES

THE ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY, room 4134, New Postoffice Building. Notice to owners and tenants of alley dwellings and of other property in squares containing inhabited alleys. In accordance with the terms of Section 5 of the Act of Congress approved June 12, 1934, known as the "District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act," the Alley Dwelling Authority hereby notifies owners and tenants of alley dwellings and of other property in squares containing inhabited alleys, that each square in such squares may be demolished, removed, or vacated, and that the square may be replatted on or before July 1, 1944. As defined in the said act—(a) The term "alley" means (1) any court, thoroughfare, or passage, private or public, less than 30 feet wide at any point; and (2) any court, thoroughfare, or passage, private or public, thirty feet or more in width, that does not open directly with a width of at least thirty feet upon a public street that is at least forty feet wide from building line to building line. (b) The term "inhabited alley" means an alley in or appurtenant to which there are one or more alley dwellings. (c) The term "alley dwelling" means any dwelling fronting upon or having its principal means of ingress from an alley. This definition does not include an accessory building, such as a garage, with living rooms for servants or other employes; if the principal entrance to the living rooms of the accessory building is from the street property to which it is appurtenant. (d) The term "dwelling" means any building or structure used or designed to be used in whole or in part as a living or a sleeping place by one or more human beings. Marsh Re-elected By Citizens' Group

Clayton C. Marsh was re-elected president of the Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association last night. Others chosen were:

Harold J. Clay and Miss Lorena G. Mondereau, vice presidents; Harold S. Huggins, secretary; Henry Hirrlinger, financial secretary; Miss Katherine Donahey, assistant secretary; William S. Torbert, treasurer, and Thomas J. Llewellyn and Freeman Weiss, delegates to the federation. All were named unanimously.

Many members complained that trash collections had been suspended while District trucks were used for snow removal. The association will ask that trash collections be continued regularly.

New Dam Planned On Staunton River

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9.—The Smith Mountain Power Co., with headquarters at Alexandria, applied to the State corporation commission today for a permit to erect a power dam on the Staunton River at Smith Mountain which would create a 9,800-acre lake.

The commission set February 25 as the hearing date on the application for the development, which would cover portions of Pittsylvania, Franklin and Bedford counties.

The project would include, according to the application, a generator of 30,000 horsepower capacity, and a dam 165 feet high and 450 feet wide at the base. Back water, it was said, would extend as far as Hardys Ford Bridge.

Willis G. Waldo was listed as president of the company.

'Movie Nights' For Shoreham Fans Popular

Films Made Last Week to Be Shown, New Lot Photographed.

By Chanticleer.

The kick in making motion pictures at the Shoreham these Friday nights continues—and it's another Shoreham "Movie Night" tonight. Last week's pictures will be exhibited and everyone has an opportunity to be photographed "in action" for next week's viewing. If you don't wish to be photographed, just join the line to the right, waiting for an X-ray mind reading by Prince Mogul. Barnee's music for the dancers, the Bonners for harmony, Martinet and his crow for novelty—and Wilkins and Meyers on the ballroom floor for the eye.

Kitty (Catherine the Great) Kofahl admits she should have been a dramatic critic instead of the Russian Troika's cigarette girl. Kitty spots this week's show as being nothing short of colossal. Karavaeff remains the head man with his wise-cracking, dancing, singing and buffoonery. And Ethel Pastor is splendid with a new folio of tunes under her arm.

George Ku, of the Ambassador Hi-Hat Hawaiians, wants to know where all this "Round and Round" business is getting us. Three weeks ago George predicted that the new ditty would go like wildfire—but it never would match "The Man on the Flying Trapeze" for all-around popularity and length of life. We shall see, we shall see.

Ramon, the old smoothie head waiter at Pete Macias's Heigh-Ho Club, is getting pretty well known up Philadelphia way. Ramon has a twin brother, Jose, at Philadelphia's Barclay. Now when the Philadelphians come to Washington they get a mild start when Ramon greets them at the Heigh-Ho. And more recently the local citizenry has been fooled by Jose at the Barclay. Nothing like keeping the same head waiter wherever you may be.

Just one big, happy family at the La Paree—even to writing songs. Not long ago one of the saxophonists' wives called hubby "eensy-weensy" or some such. "That's it!" someone yelled. "A knockout title for a song!" It took—and Marie Fowler and Charlie Cliff were delegated to write the tune. Now Marie is singing it. And it's right down her alley.

Just about the slickest thing Lady Mei's Mannequins have done in their successful run at the Lotus is this week's rhythm buck dance to the strains of that old, reliable "Honeysuckle Rose." A special arrangement was needed for it—something hot and sweet at the same time, if you follow me. So up rises Master Richard Koons, Bill Strickland's pianist, and meets the situation with one of the wow arrangements of all time. My deah, you mustn't miss it.

If you're one of those pipples who lament bad luck in lotteries, you should take a new lease on the situation and visit Maryland Club Gardens. Throughout the week, guests receive tickets. Each Monday night there's a drawing—and the fortunate ticket holder gets something very swellegant—if he's present. In addition, this week he gets Evelyn Thawl, formerly of the Ziegfeld Follies (but not to take home, of course) and Fran Trappe, accordionist, with Jimmy Harris and his music for dancing.

• • • •

Its Muriel Ames and a knockout acrobatic number of Host Peter Borras' Madrillon this week. Johnnie Barnes, the tap artist, is on view another week, evidently out for a record for length of stay in the local precincts. Leon Brusiloff and a revamped aggregation of Brusiloffians for your dancing.

• • • •

Jack and Leo, who entertain the cocktailers at the Mayfair these evenings, are the authors of many of those litlte skits they present. And they sing and play just about any tune you can call off . . . Vic Whitsell, who waves the Stone Villa baton, once recorded for Columbia . . . It's just about reached a state where a reservation is necessary to insure a table at Wardman Park's Dragon Room. Jimmy Santmyer and his orchestra for the dancing.

Those Duncan Flaperettes at the Dude Ranch are a versatile band of troupers. There's Dawn Aubrey, f'instance, in a shim-sham number, and Billie Aubrey, who specializes in an intricate tap number with her sister. Dixie Dyer brings back that old favorite "I Ain't Got Nobody" this week and, of course, Phil Barrett and his Dude Ranch orchestra play dance numbers to meet your moods.

Six Little Flapperettes

The Dude Ranch has on view this week the Duncan Flapperettes, with Dixie Dyer, mistress of ceremonies, and Phil Barrett and his orchestra.

Prisoner Too Literal.

New York, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—In West Side Court today a judge ruled that Alex Fourney must return a pair of pants he borrowed from Jack Kahn. Fourney, who had them on at the time, started to obey the order right in court, but was instructed to retire to another room.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

WHEN a battleship becomes unfit for further use, the personnel of that ship is not discharged from the service, but is transferred to other units of the Navy. This fact is brought to our attention by John Arthur Shaw, director of the Veterans Preference League, in view of the policy being followed in many instances in abolishment of civilian agencies and the subsequent stranding of their staffs.

BAKER.

"Not only are the officers and enlisted men from the decommissioned ships absorbed in other units of the Navy, but their rank or rating is not impaired," Mr. Shaw points out.

This is done, he holds, because the Navy appreciates the fact that it is to its advantage, and to the advantage of the country, to retain trained personnel, even though in excess of the needs of the moment.

"The possible demolition of the entire personnel structure of the AAA once more brings to my mind that the civil branch of the Government would do well to follow the example of the Navy in this matter, and, if the AAA or any other Government unit is abolished or reduced, to carry this personnel as excess and transfer them to other units until such time as they may be absorbed in other units," the veterans and employe leader said.

"Thus, it will be seen that by adopting this rule the civil Government would not only be adding a little more humanity and fairness to their operations, but would save the Government money by having at all times a trained personnel ready to transfer to bureaus requiring their services."

Members of the Government Printing Office baseball team will be hosts at a dance tomorrow night in Harding Hall with Bernie Jarboe's Orchestra playing, according to George H. Mosedale (P), manager.

Three Treasury Retirements.

Florida Reception Planned.

Dan P. Mularkey (F), RFC, secretary of the Florida State Society, announces the society will hold its annual Congressional reception and ball January 18 at the Washington Hotel. All Floridians in Government service are urged by Mr. Mularkey to contact him at 1514 Seventeenth street northwest, for reservations.

William K. Mayes (C), RFC, is chairman of the entertainment committee in charge of the Congressional ball. A unique leap year dance is being planned for February.

Miss Dorothy Wood (P), secretary to Representative Gardner R. Withrow, of Wisconsin, has been receiving congraulations on being the youngest secretary of the present Congress. She is only 19 years of age.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF F, P or C follows your name in this column call in person on the Federal Diary editor today only between 3:30 and 5 p. m. You will receive tickets to one of the following Loew's Theaters: F, Loew's Fox (stage, George Givot, Liazeed Arabian Troupe and other acts; screen, Jean Harlow and Spencer Tracy in "Riffraff"); or to P, Loew's Palace (Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allen and Edna Mae Oliver in "A Tale of Two Cities"); or to C, Loew's Columbia (Will Rogers in "In Old Kentucky").

E. W. Luther Appointed.

E. W. Luther, of the Department of Agriculture Post, No. 36, has been appointed chairman of the committee on finance for the American Legion ball to be held February 19 in the Mayflower Hotel.

Others appointed by General Chairman John R. Thompson to assist Luther are Edith Quinn, Jacob Jones Post; William Mulkey, Kenneth Nash Post; John H. Dennis, Vincent B. Costello Post; William R. Clifford, Lincoln Post, and Charles J. O'Lane, Bureau of Engraving and Printing Post.

David Lumsden, Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, will be the principal speaker tomorrow night at the 827th meeting of the Biological Society of Washington at the Cosmos Club. His subject will be "Orchids and their Fertilization." Living specimens will be on exhibition, and his talk will be further illustrated with slides. F. A. McClure, of the Smithsonian Institution, will speak on "A. S. Hitchcock: An Appreciation."

Prohibited Transfers.

Q. Can you tell me what classes of employes are not eligible for transfer under the Civil Service rules?—Paulline E. Reid (F).

A. A person serving in an unclassified position or in a position that is not required to be filled through competitive examination is not eligible to transfer to competitive positions unless he was appointed through competitive examination or by promotion or transfer from a competitive position. A postmaster of the fourth class who receives annual compensation less than $500 is not eligible on the basis of such employment for transfer to another competitive classified position.

Budd Mfg. Plans Sale Of British Subsidiary

Philadelphia, Jan. 9 (AP).—Edward G. Budd, president of the Budd Manufacturing Co., said today negotiations are under way for the sale to British interests of the British Pressed Steel Co. common stock.

The stock is held by Budd International Corporation, in which corporation the Budd Manufacturing Co. of Philadelphia holds a controlling interest. Budd has just returned from a European tour.

Ruse Nets $21,762.

Genoa, Italy, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—The old trick of informing a lady she dropped her handkerchief worked successfully for a young thief in a bank here today. The woman was in a line before the cashier's window and laid an envelope containing title to 270,000 lire ($21,762) on a counter when she stooped for a handkerchief that was not hers. The thief grabbed the envelope and escaped.

The answer to a question we've been asked 10,000 times

THOUSANDS of our friends—enthusiasts all for Four Roses—have asked us "Why is Four Roses a blend of straight whiskies?"

The answer is simple: Because our 70 years of experience in making fine whiskey have taught us that the proper blending of several top-grade American straight whiskies produces a better whiskey than any of those whiskies alone could be!

It's plain old-fashioned common sense. Fine champagne is a blend. Fine cognac is a blend. The finest American whiskey—and we mean Four Roses—is a blend. A blend of straight American whiskies.

Any one of the straight whiskies that go into Four Roses—and only straight whiskies do—is a superb whiskey on its own. But every whiskey has some outstanding characteristic—something extra in the way of flavor, aroma, smoothness, or body. By blending these whiskies together, the way we know how to blend them, we give to one magnificent liquor all the outstanding characteristics of the separate whiskies. We achieve a flavor finer by far than that of any of the whiskies alone.

That's why we offer Four Roses not as "a mighty good whiskey for the price" but as the finest whiskey you can lift to your lips, regardless of price. That's a large claim, we know. But it happens to be so. And we're confident that one taste of Four Roses will convince you it's so. Just try a bottle!

FOUR ROSES

A blend of all straight, all American whiskies—blended as only Frankfort knows how
